
THE BESTSELLING SYSTEM FOR AYURVEDA AND YOGA THERAPY PROFESSIONALS
GROW YOUR AYURVEDIC BUSINESS
5 Steps To Start and Grow Your Practice
JACOB GRISCOM

Version 2.0

Limits of Liability & Disclaimer of Warranty

The author and publisher of this book and the associated materials have used their best efforts in preparing this material. The author and publisher make no representations or warranties with respect to the accuracy, applicability, fitness, or completeness of the contents of this material. They disclaim any warranties expressed or implied, merchantability, or fitness for any particular purpose. The author and publisher shall in no event be held liable for any loss or other damages, including but not limited to special, incidental, consequential, or other damages. If you have any doubts about anything, the advice of a competent professional should be sought. This material contains elements protected under International and Federal Copyright laws and treaties. Any unauthorized reprint or use of this material is prohibited.

Table of Contents

"Welcome Grow Your Ayurvedic Business" 5

Getting Started 7

Make Your Success Inevitable 8

Better Health, Financial Security, Great Relationships, and Spiritual Freedom 8

Exercise: Create Your Ideal Schedule, Part I 12

Guarantee Your Results 13

Exercise: Create Your Ideal Schedule, Part II 16

More of What You Love, Less of What You Don't 17

Exercise: A-B-C Work List 20

Summary Report 21

Step 1: Map Your Market 22

1. Ayurveda Awareness and Niche Markets 23

People Don't Know About Ayurveda, and We Don't Need Them To 23

Exercise: Narrow Your Niche 26

Report: Ayurveda and Yoga Therapy Niches 27

Summary Report 28

2. Niche Research and Communication 29

Research Your Niche 29

Template: Surveys and Interviews 32

Your Niche's Needs 33

Exercise: Niche Needs 34

Template: The General Practitioner 35

Communicate What You Do 36

Template: What You Do Statement 37

Summary Report 38

3. Your Economy and Qualifications 39

Succeeding in Poor Economies 39

Understanding and Communicating Qualifications 40

Exercise: Qualifications Story 42

Summary Report 43

Step 2: The Committed Client Formula 44

4. Your Behavioral Theory of Change 45

Exercise: Behavioral Theory of Change Worksheet 47

Summary Report 49

5. Designing Content Using a Framework 50

Template: Free Report 52

Summary Report 54

6. Naming Your Concepts and Content 55

Exercise: Content and Concept Naming 56

7. Building Your Private Client Coaching Program 57

Key concepts: 57

Template: New Client Paperwork 58

Template: Informed Consent Form 62

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © jacobgriscom.com - All Rights Reserved.

Step 3: The Sales Sadhana System 63
8. Your Website and Email List 64
Key Concepts: 64
Template: Opt-In Page and Headlines 65
9. Introductory Events and Free Session Offers 67
Key Concepts: 67
Exercise: Free Session Offer 68
10. Enrolling New Clients with the Sales Sadhana 70
Motivation to Change 70
How to Have a Sales Sadhana Conversation 71
Exercise: Sales Sadhana Outline 73
11. Earning a Great Living with Your Practice 74
Key Concepts: 74

Step 4: Multiply Your Marketing 75
12. Business Metrics: Follow Your Numbers 76
Key Concepts: 76
13. Client Testimonials and Referrals 77
Testimonial Tips 77
Referrals 77
14. Business Cards, Brochures, and Signatures 78
Email Signature Template 78
Business Cards and Brochures 79
15. Advertising 80
The "Deals" Strategy 80
Pay-Per-Click (PPC) Ad Campaigns 80
Creating Advertisements That Get A Response 82
16. Social Media 84
YouTube Channel Strategy 84
Optimizing Social Media for Leads 84
17. Public Relations 87
"Get Free Coverage" Guide 87

Step 5: Advanced Profit Growth 88
18. It's About Community 89
19. Your Mission and Vision 91
Mission and Vision Statements 91
20. Group Programs 92
Group Program Formats 92
Finding Prospective Partners and Building Relationships 92
Exercise: Finding Business Partners 94

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © jacobgriscom.com - All Rights Reserved.

"Welcome Grow Your Ayurvedic Business"

Namaste' Dear Friend,

Congratulations on purchasing Grow Your Ayurvedic Business!

With this training and support you'll get everything you need to build a thriving practice with committed clients who get long term sustainable results with their health and consciousness, and earn a great living doing the work you love.

Without this training and support, practitioners run into the same inner and outer obstacles that block them from getting the success they want and need to sustain their practice. This has been a big problem for our field and has limited the impact of Ayurveda and Yoga in the world.

If you're successful it means that the incredible value that you offer as a practitioner is being delivered to your clients. It means that your clients are being empowered to take control of their own health so that they can thrive in their lives. Collectively, it means that we are shifting the definition of "health care" from a dangerous and limited model of "disease management" to true health care, where individuals use disease as a teacher to understand and resolve disharmony in their lives.

The 5-step Grow Your Ayurvedic Business system—which I developed through my own struggles, mentorship, insights, and results—is a proven system for building successful practices. If you can get out of your comfort zone, take action, learn from your results, and get coached as needed, I am confident that you will build a successful and rewarding practice and make a tremendous difference in the lives of many people.

The essence of this 5-step system is simple:

- Understand the needs and challenges of a specific group of people.
- Figure out what they'll need to change to overcome these challenges and get results, and design your program to help them implement those changes.
- Build your system for collecting prospective clients and consistently enrolling them in your committed program.
- Create free and paid marketing and advertising channels to bring prospective clients into your enrollment system.
- Leverage your time, impact, and income with group programs, information products, and partnerships.

Our mission is to empower you to build a successful and transformative business for yourself, your clients, and your community. Our vision is a field full of clear, powerful, and compassionate Ayurveda and Yoga therapy professionals transforming their clients' lives through true health care, and earning a professional income.

Whether you've got 5 hours per week to dedicate to your business, or you're ready to jump in full time, here's how to best use this program:

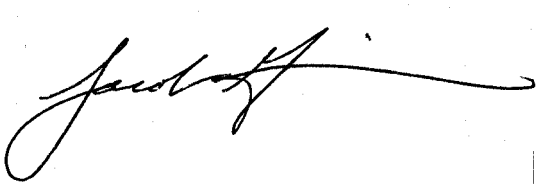

1. Take it step-by-step, and start with the "Getting Started" section: read the chapters, do the homework, and get coached.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © jacobgriscom.com - All Rights Reserved.

2. Then move on to the next section "Step 1 – Map Your Market": read the chapters, do the homework, and get coached.
3. Then complete the next section "Step 2 – The Committed Client Formula": read the chapters, do the homework, and get coached.
4. Then go through the "Bonus Section": read the chapters, do the homework, and get coached.
5. Complete "Step 3 – The Sales Sadhana System": read the chapters, do the homework, and get coached.
6. Complete "Step 4 – Multiply Your Marketing," and "Step 5 – Advanced Profit Growth": read the chapters, do the homework, and get coached.

Before you go any further, take a moment right now to print this textbook and put the pages in a 3-ring binder so you have easy access to all of the content and homework, and then get started with the first chapter and "Make Your Success Inevitable."

In Health and Joy,

Jacob Griscom

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © jacobgriscom.com - All Rights Reserved.

Getting Started

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © jacobgriscom.com - All Rights Reserved.

Make Your Success Inevitable

Better Health, Financial Security, Great Relationships, and Spiritual Freedom

Ayurveda and Yoga teach us that there are four pursuits in our lives, and that we can experience wonderful results or painful challenges based on the attention we give them.

If we put conscious attention on these four aims we can experience pleasure and satisfaction through a fit and healthy body with abundant energy. We can build wealth and assets that provide security and freedom for our family. We can find deep purpose and satisfaction through loving truthful relationships and meaningful service to others. Most importantly, we can remember our True Nature as Spirit.

On the other hand, if we do not put conscious attention on these four aims then we may experience our body becoming weak and overweight, fatigued and pained. Our finances may become a source of stress and slavery, and create tension in our family. Our relationships may fill with anxiety and mistrust, and we may be trapped in work that feels tedious or meaningless, while our True Nature as Spirit remains obscured and forgotten.

So, what are these four aims of life and how do we put our conscious attention on their fulfillment?

Kama: Bodily Health and Sensual Pleasure

Ayurveda describes three key pillars that in balance create health and pleasure, and out of balance, disease and pain.

They are:

- Food (and Water),
- Sleep (and Activity/Exercise), and
- Sex (Vital Energy).

When we want to be healthy and feel good in our body, then we need to be sure we've got these areas covered. And when we're working with clients, our task is to discover their symptoms and what is out of balance in these pillars.

Which are the best behaviors that people have in place when they are healthy? And which are the worst behaviors that people have in place when they are unhealthy?

Those are specific important questions, because if we know these behaviors, then we'll know exactly where to focus when we want to restore our own health, and we'll be clear about the behaviors our clients will need to change to improve their health too.

This table reflects my understanding and experience of the best and worst behaviors for promoting health:

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © jacobgriscom.com - All Rights Reserved.

Behaviors for Health and Disease

Pillar	Promotes Health	Promotes Disease
Food (and Water)	Natural Whole Foods Abundant Vegetables and Fruits Abundant Pure Water	Processed Foods Sugars and Chemicals Dehydrating Drinks
Sleep (and Activity/Exercise)	Earlier Bed Time Daily Exercise	Later Bed Time Infrequent Exercise
Sex (Vital Energy)	Sexual Urge is Satisfied Emotions are Cleared Daily Pranayama Daily Meditation	Sexual Urge is Unsatisfied Emotions are Repressed No Awareness of Breath No Stillness of Mind

Artha: Wealth, Business, and Assets

Artha refers to wealth. When we are interested in financial security and freedom for our self and our family, we give conscious time and attention to building our business and investment skills.

This is because these skills help us build assets that provide for us financially, and money is the primary form of exchange for the food, shelter, and energy we need. In fact, these things are really where the wealth is, and if we could build food, shelter, and energy security, our financial security needs would be greatly lessened as well.

Dharma: Truthful Relationships and Meaningful Service

How much responsibility are we willing to take for our own lives? Can we recognize the places in our lives where we hand over our power to others, or to situations and circumstances?

This is something that I've come to understand as a commitment to Dharma: practicing honesty with myself and others and speaking 100% of my truth, even if it's inconvenient or unpopular. And then, taking 100% responsibility for my truth and unpacking blame and judgment to see where I've given away my power and persecuted others.

If my energy is freed up from playing the victim, rescuing others, or blaming and judging, I can find power and confidence in myself, and provide truly meaningful service by helping others do the same.

Moksha: Going Home

We can't hang the weight of our life on physical health…it will pass.
We can't hang the weight of our life on money and wealth…it can't save us.
We can't hang the weight of our life on relationships…that's a lot of weight for any relationship.

In some sense, it seems we need to experience some ability, and even some mastery, in our health, wealth, and relationships before we can be sincere in our spiritual seeking. Life is where we learn our lessons by facing and overcoming our obstacles.

When we have enough success in our life's endeavors, and we learn to create and experience health, wealth, human love and intimacy, we may find that even though it's wonderful, these things do not fulfill us completely.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © jacobgriscom.com - All Rights Reserved.

Then Moksha is the ultimate inescapable return journey home. This final aim of life can bring an immensely joyful approach to the other aims. As we realize that the context for the pursuit of health, wealth, and love is our own spiritual growth and freedom, we can let go of resistance and welcome the lessons.

Coaching In the Four Aims of Life

It just so happens that the modern coaching and consulting profession has increasingly organized itself around these aims of life.

In fact, the three "mega-niche" areas where most of the money is made and most of the coaching products and services are focused are: health, wealth, and relationships. And arguably, there are more than a few wealthy and powerful competing interests in the "spirituality" category!

As Ayurvedic practitioners and Yoga therapists, most of our services and focus will probably be in the health mega-niche, but there's value in realizing that we are part of a much broader and rapidly growing industry of successful coaching and consulting professionals.

So, what's going on here? When do people hire coaches?

People hire coaches when it is important to them to produce a different result. It is becoming much more common and acceptable for people to invest in education and professional coaching when they want to change something in their life.

You invested in this training program and coaching because it is important to you to create a different or new result with your practice. I personally always like to be working with a coach or mentor in at least one of these areas. I know that education and coaching is consistently one of the best investments I can make with high return and tremendous power to create change.

Are there areas of your life that are stuck or breaking down? Any areas you've been avoiding or feeling powerless around?

Think about hiring a coach or finding a mentor who can give you a structure to invest in and focus on those areas. You'll put your conscious attention on them, be held accountable to taking new actions, and you'll get new results.

How to Put Conscious Attention on the Four Aims of Life

How can we put conscious attention on the four aims of life so that we can create and experience better health, financial security, great relationships, and spiritual freedom?

I'd like to share these five powerful steps and questions that you can use for yourself and to support and empower your clients:

1. Identify which areas of your life need attention. Where do you feel powerless or resent, blame, or judge others?
2. Name the problems. What are they, and what other issues are they causing?
3. Name the desired outcomes. What's your 100% truth about your ultimate big vision in this area of your life, and what other benefits would you get from that?

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © jacobgriscom.com - All Rights Reserved.

4. Take responsibility. What are the behaviors you are choosing that are causing the challenges?
5. Claim power. What are the new behaviors you will take to get the desired outcome? (This may include getting education or hiring a coach in this area.)

Take Action: Create Your Ideal Schedule, Part I

Are you ready for better health, financial security, great relationships, and spiritual freedom?

Complete Part I In the next exercise, "Create Your Ideal Schedule," right now so you can implement what you've just learned and put your conscious attention on the four aims of life.

In this next segment, I'll show you how to plug those behaviors into powerful systems so that you can guarantee your own success.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © jacobgriscom.com - All Rights Reserved.

Exercise: Create Your Ideal Schedule, Part I

Description: If we want to change problem areas around our health, wealth, and relationships, we need to connect with the full impact these problems are having in our lives and take full responsibility for them. Then we can claim the power to generate new outcomes for ourselves. Use the questions below to do this for yourself, and then support your clients to do this too.

1. Identify which areas of your life need attention. Where do you feel powerless or resent, blame, or judge others?

2. Name the problems. What are they, and what other issues are they causing?

3. Name the desired outcomes. What's your 100% truth about your ultimate big vision in this area of your life, and what other benefits would you get from that?

4. Take responsibility. What are the behaviors you are choosing that are causing the challenges?

5. Claim power. What are the new behaviors you will take to get the desired outcome? (This may include getting education or hiring a coach in this area.)

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © jacobgriscom.com - All Rights Reserved.

Guarantee Your Results

The best intentions are only useful to us if we actually follow through with them.

If we can learn how to make certain behaviors consistent and reliable then we can make rapid and powerful positive changes in our health, wealth, and relationships. We can also help other people, especially our clients, make positive long-term changes as well.

Otherwise, without consistent reliable behavior, we're tossed around by the conditions of our life and the whims of others. We revisit the same good intentions over and over again (perhaps with some added shame in there) while challenges with our health, wealth, or relationships persist, and we feel less confident about supporting others to make positive changes in their lives.

If we're going to use the power within us to create positive change in ourselves and support others we need to know how to put conditions in place that guarantee certain behaviors and make desired outcomes inevitable.

Create New Habits with Success Rituals

In the Bhagavad Gita, the character Drona is a teacher to both the Pandus (representing the forces for spiritual development) and the Kurus (representing the forces of illusion). Drona represents habit and is a powerful ally for both sides of the battle for power in the physical, psychological, and spiritual kingdoms.

Consistent behaviors become habits with a certain amount of gravity and inertia that holds them in place automatically. The results we get in life come from our habitual behaviors, so if we don't like the results we're getting we need to get Drona supporting the other side.

When we first try to change a habit we usually come up against some resistance. The new behavior we attempt to put in place can feel awkward or unfamiliar and there's an inner friction around doing the new thing and avoiding the old one. We humans are wired for instant gratification, not long term satisfaction, so this is entirely normal and to be expected.

Fortunately, if we can consistently do a new behavior for about 30 consecutive days it starts to become anchored as a habit, and we get to feel Drona's supportive influence in place. Still, to get through that first 30 days, we need to employ some will power and ritual. The will power comes through connecting with the pain and problems the old habit is creating and the positive outcomes the new habit will generate.

A ritual has a few important ingredients:

- It should be framed within the specific problems we want to overcome or avoid and the specific desired outcomes we want to achieve
- It should be mapped out in detail
- As much as possible, it should be done around the same time each day
- It should have conscious beginnings and endings

When I committed to implementing my Ayurvedic morning health ritual, I took out a 3x5 notecard and wrote out each step, along with the time it would start and end.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © jacobgriscom.com - All Rights Reserved.

6:00	Wake Up, Brush Teeth, Scrape Tongue, Go to the Bathroom Drink a Tall Mug of Warm Water, Do Neti Pot
6:30	6 Slow Sun Salutations, Pigeon Pose on Both Sides, Maha Mudra
6:45	Pranayama with 1-2 Minutes Meditation Between Rounds: (2) Rounds of (50) Bhastrika (2) Rounds of (120) Kapalabhati (1) Rounds of (24) Anuloma Viloma (6) Kriya Yoga Breaths Nauli Kriyas
7:15	Workout: 40 pushups, 30 vertical leaps, 15 pullups
7:30	Complete

For the first week or so, I kept the plan with me as a reference and did it every day until the habit was in place. I've also got a healthy breakfast smoothie and lunchtime ritual in place that makes eating easy and makes getting great nutrition automatic.

Inevitability Thinking

Building conscious rituals around necessary behaviors facilitates any desired outcome in health, wealth, relationship, or spiritual development, but sometimes that still isn't enough. When a new ritual isn't getting to the "sticking" point or an established ritual drops out of our routine, we need to take it a step further and make it inevitable.

"Inevitability Thinking" is a concept introduced to me by, Eben Pagan, one of my marketing mentors, a highly successful entrepreneur and brilliant teacher. The question to ask is, "What conditions have to be in place to get a specific outcome?" This question is what helped me develop and clarify the Integral Ayurveda coaching methodology that you'll be learning and experiencing in this program.

Systems build in scheduled time for the ritual along with accountability to others. Other strategies for accountability can include getting some self-leverage with fees or unwanted consequences, like donating money or even shaving our head! The key is that it needs to be a significant enough consequence to set the ritual as a total priority, and that we have outer support to hold us accountable.

This is one of the reasons that coaching is so powerful, because a coach can hold us accountable to what we say we're going to do, and since we invest to work with a coach the idea of "wasting money" motivates us as well. Friends can potentially make for good accountability partners as well, and when it comes to our business, our MasterMind group is an ideal environment to set up accountability.

In this program you've got built in coaches, along with a MasterMind group of ideal peers in the same profession and the same program as you. Take advantage of this and build your rituals to use us!

How to Set Up Your Success Rituals and Systems

What are the steps we need to take to build success rituals and systems into our businesses and our lives?

1. Collect your desired outcomes and new behaviors you created in Part I of the "Create Your Ideal Schedule" exercise.

2. Detail your desired outcomes into specific goals for the next 30 days, the next 90 days, and the full 6 months of this program. Enter a 30-minute period into your calendar at the same time each month to update your goals.
3. Detail your new behaviors into specific daily and weekly success rituals. What will you do? How will you do it? When will you do it? Enter it into your calendar on a recurring basis.
4. At the end of each week, detail your objectives for the next week and the actions you need to complete to reach them. Enter the actions into your calendar.
5. Everyday, detail your objectives for the day and the actions you need to complete to reach them. Start with your highest leverage actions first.

Take Action: Create Your Ideal Schedule, Part II

This is where you make real changes.

Complete Part II in the next exercise, "Create Your Ideal Schedule," right now so you can implement what you've just learned and make your success inevitable.

In this next segment, I'll show you how to do more of the work you love, you're good at, and that makes you money. I'll also show you how to do less of or eliminate the work you don't love, aren't good at, and costs you money when you waste time on it.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © jacobgriscom.com - All Rights Reserved.

Exercise: Create Your Ideal Schedule, Part II

Description: Finding the clarity, motivation, and power to change is the first part of creating new results. The second part is creating rituals and inevitability systems to guarantee our results. Use the steps below to guarantee you implement the new behaviors that will generate your desired outcomes.

1. Collect your desired outcomes and new behaviors you created in Part I of the "Create Your Ideal Schedule" exercise.

2. Detail your desired outcomes into specific goals for the next 30 days, the next 90 days, and the full 6 months of this program. Enter a 30-minute period into your calendar at the same time each month to update your goals.

3. Detail your new behaviors into specific daily and weekly success rituals. What will you do? How will you do it? When will you do it? Enter it into your calendar on a recurring basis.

4. At the end of each week, detail your objectives for the next week and the actions you need to complete to reach them. Enter the actions into your calendar.

5. Everyday, detail your objectives for the day and the actions you need to complete to reach them. Start with your highest leverage actions first.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © jacobgriscom.com - All Rights Reserved.

More of What You Love, Less of What You Don't

When we get other people to do the work we're not as good at and focus on our high value work we grow our practices faster, have more energy and create more value for our clients, and free up more time for family, friends, relaxation, travel, and meditation. We also free up our mind space from the clutter and overwhelm of unfinished projects and tasks so we have more consistent and deep access to our inspiration, enthusiasm, and creativity.

Instead, when we don't focus on our high value work and we get overly bogged down in too many small repetitive tasks or overly involved in complicated and cumbersome technical challenges, we rob ourselves of energy we need to get clients. We rob our clients of value that we could be offering and creating for them. We suck up free time that could more enjoyably be spent in the relationships and activities that are more important to us. Most significantly, we fill our minds with the confusion and frustration that blocks the flow of positive energy through our work and our lives.

If the people who help us are skilled at what they do, then we also end up with a better, more competent process and outcome that can save us from substantial extra expenses, wasted time, and future problems. To the degree that their contribution supports our professionalism we benefit from increased attractiveness and rapport with our prospects, and we get more clients who we can help make positive changes in their health and consciousness.

It makes sense then that if we're doing work that we're not good at then we're likely to follow an amateur path that ends up costing us more money and more time, and creating bigger problems that are harder to address later on. If our results convey a lack of professionalism to our prospects we will unknowingly drive them away and lose great clients who could have done powerful transformative work with us.

Let's cover some principles about the most important work to focus on in our practices, the type of work to get other people to do, where to find these people and how to work with them.

Develop and Communicate Massive Value

Would you agree that our main role as Ayurvedic practitioners and Yoga therapists is to help our clients improve their health and consciousness?

That experience of meaningful service is a core desire of many practitioners who are attracted to our field. If that's the case, then the more we support our clients' improved health and consciousness, the more meaningful our service feels to us.

There are two main areas to focus the majority of our attention to most help our clients. These two areas are the parts of our practice that we should not get someone else to do for us. However, we do welcome lots of collaboration and mentorship. These two areas are our service and our marketing, in other words, helping our clients get the results they want and effectively communicating so that they hire us.

In essence our service and our marketing should be braided together, where we are constantly improving our service through effective communication and our marketing through the lessons and experience we gain in our service. Our marketing should educate and inspire our clients, and our service should effectively convince our clients to adopt new behaviors.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © jacobgriscom.com - All Rights Reserved.

Practitioners who focus on these two areas in their business, their service and their marketing, as much as possible will help many people and feel a tremendous amount of meaning and satisfaction from their practice. If you want that for yourself, I recommend you dedicate as many of your available working hours as possible to improving your service and mastering your marketing. Focus on helping your clients get the results they want and effectively communicating so that people hire you to help them.

Reduce and Eliminate Distraction and Interruption

The biggest obstacle to growing any successful business nowadays is the constant opportunity for distraction and interruption: email, phone calls, text messages, instant messaging, television, Facebook, YouTube, and the rest of the standard attention-stealers that sabotage us from actually seeing a single project and objective all the way through.

It is possible and incredibly common to go through an entire work day simply reacting and responding to all of these distractions, while making little to no progress in the two essential areas of improving service and marketing communication. When we've decided to grow a successful Ayurveda or Yoga therapy practice, we have to reduce and eliminate distraction and interruption.

The only way this happens is if we do it consciously: we clarify the exact project and objective we're working on and we shut everything else off. Close email. Turn off the phone(s). Close the internet browser. Turn off the television and any other background noise. Focus on the project at hand.

Once we get into a focused state and we're in the grove with our project, it can take up to 15 minutes to get back to that state again if we get interrupted. This is one of the most important reasons that I recommend breaking our work up into focused 3-hour blocks with short breaks. For example, one 3-hour block being totally present while serving clients, and one 3-hour block focused on improving marketing and writing content.

Finding People to Do Work for You

If we're going to put as much of our attention as possible on improving service and marketing, then we can look at everything else as potential stuff to pass on to others: technical tasks, web development and management, business administration tasks, graphic design, repetitive daily and weekly tasks (with work and home life)…you name it.

In the beginning of our business, cash can be tight, so we need to figure out what to get rid of first and where to find really great deals. Even as our businesses start generating more revenue this is still a common sense approach. We need to value our money, but also our time and focus, because everything that takes away from our time and focus is costing us lots of money.

Here's how to prioritize your work and find great support for a little money. I recommend you take an actual inventory of where your time is being spent each day and the cost that's having, and then:

1. Schedule in time for your email, phone calls, texting, etc. so that you're conscious about these activities instead of letting them distract, interrupt, and steal from you and your clients.

2. Make an A-B-C work list for yourself.
    a. "A" Work: Your service and your marketing (including the coaching calls, training, and homework from this program), and any other part of your business you love doing.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © jacobgriscom.com - All Rights Reserved.

b. "B" Work: The stuff you're okay at, and kind of enjoy. It may also be work that involves a lot of training to get someone else to do.
c. "C" Work: The stuff you're not good at, or really don't like. The work that someone else could do for you with little to no training on your part.

3. Get someone else doing as much of your C work as soon as possible, and move more of your B work over time. You can start with these resources:
    a. www.elance.com and www.guru.com: These sites are excellent for finding freelancers for any one-time task or project. Of course, if you really like working with someone, the relationship can develop from there.
    b. www.fiverr.com: This is a really fun and cool site where you can find people willing to do all sorts of incredible and ridiculous things for you for $5.
    c. Your local colleges and universities: If you have good research, design, or technical projects that would make could internship opportunities for college students, clarify the opportunity and benefits, and post it at your local colleges.
    d. www.onlinejobs.ph: This is the leading resource for hiring incredible talented individuals in the Philippines. They are very often well educated, talented, loyal, and have excellent English speaking skills because the schools teach in English. You can find incredible people for $2-$8/hour, but I recommend taking this route when you can hire someone for ongoing part-time or full-time work.
    e. www.hiremymom.com: As above, but these are talented stay-at-home moms looking for work. It will cost a little more than hiring from the Philippines, but you can still find amazing people for $8-$10+/hour.

Take Action: A-B-C Work List

Great! Now it's time to put what you've learned into action so that you set yourself up to do more of what you love, and less of what you don't.

Complete the next exercise, "A-B-C Work List," and get going with this right now.

The preparation and action you take from this chapter truly will make your success inevitable, and will pay off big time for all of your fortunate clients as well.

Exercise: A-B-C Work List

Description: The biggest obstacles to moving forward in our business are distraction and interruption. We need to reduce and eliminate these factors and then find people to do the work that we're not as good at or isn't as important for us to do, and then focus on the two most important areas: our service (how well we help people get the results they want) and our marketing (how well we communicate so that people hire us). Use this work list to identify your "A," "B," and "C" work and get more of your time and focus in the "A" category.[1]

First, schedule in time for your email, phone calls, texting, etc. so that you're conscious about these activities instead of letting them distract, interrupt, and steal from you and your clients.

"A" Work

Your service and your marketing (including the coaching calls, training, and homework from this program), and any other part of your business you love doing. Prioritize these activities for the majority of your work time and schedule them into your calendar.

"B" Work

The stuff you're okay at, and kind of enjoy. It may also be work that involves a lot of training to get someone else to do. Train someone to do one of these things for you every 90 days so that you have more time and focus on your "A" work.

"C" Work

The stuff you're not good at, or really don't like. This is the work that someone else could do for you with little to no training on your part. Get someone to do these things for you as soon as possible so that you have more time and focus on your "A" work.

---

[1] Use the resources from Chapter 1. Make Your Results Inevitable – More of What You Love, Less of What You Don't

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © jacobgriscom.com - All Rights Reserved.

Summary Report

Congratulations! This first chapter is foundational for success in this program and in your practice, and for that matter, in any area of life where you apply what you learn.

We covered the 4 aims of life and how to put our conscious attention on them so that we can have physical health, financial security, great relationships and meaningful service. These are the areas of our life to learn about and gain mastery within the context of the spiritual path that holds us and nurtures our development.

We talked about how we can guarantee our results through creating rituals around the behaviors we need to implement and inevitability systems that ensure these rituals happen consistently.

Finally, we covered the importance of eliminating distraction and interruption and getting other people to do busywork and things we're not good at. This allows us to focus on the two most important things in our business: our service (how well we help people get the results they want) and our marketing (how well we communicate so that people hire us).

When you completed the homework from this chapter you took the action to implement what you learned and set yourself up for conscious success. Keep these with you , use them, and revisit them daily, weekly, monthly, and every 90 days:

- Create Your Ideal Schedule, Part I and Part II
- A-B-C Work List

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © jacobgriscom.com - All Rights Reserved.

Step 1: Map Your Market

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © jacobgriscom.com - All Rights Reserved.

1. Ayurveda Awareness and Niche Markets

People Don't Know About Ayurveda, and We Don't Need Them To

Once we understand that success in our practice does not depend on people knowing about Ayurveda, a new world of opportunity opens to us. When we see and understand how to address the needs of a specific market we can always find clients. We also make it easier to go deep in knowledge and become an expert who can be very effective in serving a particular group of people. We do away with competition, at least in the conventional business sense.

When we don't understand that our success is not dependent on awareness of Ayurveda, then our options feel pretty limited. We look predominantly to yoga studios and the like for opportunities to share Ayurveda, often end up with smaller audiences, and are in greater competition for fewer prospective clients with less focused needs. We make it harder to understand one market's specific needs and become an expert at effectively serving our clients.

Making this shift from a focus on promoting Ayurveda and educating the public to understanding and focusing on the needs of a specific market is called practicing in a "niche" market.

Practice in a Niche Market

When we practice in a niche market, we get clear that we're focusing on needs instead of modalities. We are our clients' servants. We endeavor to see the world through our clients' eyes and do our very best to understand them and serve them. We focus on the results they want, and why they want them. We focus on their challenges and the impact those challenges are having on their life and how they feel.

We don't focus on educating a general and unknown market about Ayurveda and Yoga. We're not academic teachers in relationship to our clients. We serve them through Ayurveda and Yoga in their own language, and share the principles that are directly relevant to their needs. We're not concerned about how they act, think, believe, or feel, except as how these connect to what they want…not to how they measure up to an ideal.

A niche market is a specific group of people who share common needs and challenges. They may be identified by demographical factors like their sex, age, activities, profession or income, location, beliefs and interests. Specific health goals, symptoms, or diseases will also identify them.

Examples of niche markets include:

- people with diabetes,
- menopausal women,
- pregnant women,
- men or women who want to lose weight,
- elderly people with chronic pain or stiffness,
- children with autism,
- people with sleep disorders,
- men or women who are fatigued and want more energy,
- busy moms,
- and on and on.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © jacobgriscom.com - All Rights Reserved.

Does Picking a Niche Limit Our Practice?

A common concern for practitioners is that if we pick a niche for our practice, we will limit our client base. If we start cutting out people from our practice, we're limiting the prospective clients we're saying yes to, and we'll have fewer opportunities to work with people. People that would have been our clients won't be now, because they'll think we can't help them. It makes sense, right?

In fact, this is not the case.

Yes, we are limiting and targeting our communication. The people that we are not targeting should actually be repelled by our marketing, and should feel clear that what we are offering is not for them.

So what could be the advantage of that?

The people that we are targeting will hear and see our marketing communications and feel like this is exactly the right place for them, like our practice was built specifically to serve them, because it has been. When people feel that way, our response rate is incomparably higher than when we try to educate a general market about Ayurveda or Yoga.

Another interesting and unexpected thing also seems to happen when we focus our practice on a niche and needs. Other people begin to see that we are focused on helping people get results, and they begin to ask us if we might be able to help them with their challenges as well.

Finally, as we dig in with clients in our niche and help them make changes in their lives, they share their results with their friends and family, and end up referring many of them to us too.

Should we work with all of these different clients, even though our practice is focused on a specific niche? It depends on our needs and interests, but this is a far better challenge to face than the one most practitioners encounter: not having enough clients to begin with.

For General Practitioners

For those of us committed to moving forward with a general practice, then we'll still want to emphasize a focus on the most prevalent health challenges. Insights and direction for this approach are include in the template for the "General Practitioner" included in the next chapter.

How to Pick Your Niche

Here's how to pick a niche for your Ayurveda or Yoga therapy practice:

1. It's easier if you can relate to your market already. It's easiest if they can easily connect and relate with you. Make a list of your demographical information, and any health challenges that you have already successfully overcome or know how to address for yourself.
2. If you already have a practice and have helped clients get specific results and overcome specific challenges, make a list of those results. These are potential niche areas for you to target your practice as well.
3. Then narrow your niche. Look at your lists and identify the markets that you think have the greatest needs and motivation. Also identify the markets where you feel the strongest, most identified, and most connected to serving.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © jacobgriscom.com - All Rights Reserved.

4. One niche will stand out the most for you. Which one is it?

Take Action: Narrow Your Niche and Niche Report

Take some time right now to put what you've learned into action so that you can identify the niche that is the most natural direction for your practice.

Complete the following exercise, "Narrow Your Niche," that includes the report "Ayurveda and Yoga Therapy Niches," and go through the steps to pick your niche.

This is the strongest foundational step for building a sustainable practice, and consciously planning your business success. Once you know your niche you'll be able to research and clarify your market's needs and motivations so that you know how to serve them and how to communicate so that they hire you. We'll discuss this step in the next chapter.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © jacobgriscom.com - All Rights Reserved.

Exercise: Narrow Your Niche

Description: The foundation of a successful and sustainable Ayurveda or Yoga therapy practice is a clear focus on the needs of a specific market, your "niche." Use this process to discover potential niches for your practice, and narrow down to the best one.

1. It's easier if you can relate to your market already. It's easiest if they can easily connect and relate with you. Make a list of your demographical information, and any health challenges that you have already successfully overcome or know how to address for yourself.

My demographics (sex, age, profession, activities, etc.):

Health challenges I have successfully overcome or know how to address for myself:

2. If you already have a practice and have helped clients get specific results and overcome specific challenges, make a list of those results. These are potential niche areas for you to target your practice as well.

Results I've helped my clients achieve already:

3. Then narrow your niche. Look at your lists and identify the markets that you think have the greatest needs and motivation. Also identify the markets where you feel the strongest, most identified, and most connected to serving.

My top 3 to 5 niche markets:

4. One niche will stand out the most for you. Which one is it?

My niche:

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © jacobgriscom.com - All Rights Reserved.

Report: Ayurveda and Yoga Therapy Niches

Description: Use this Niche Report to explore some niche ideas that line up with who you are, your personal strengths and experience. The more specific your niche, the more responsive your market will be.

Niches by Demographics
You can narrow by combining demographic factors, being more specific, or adding in conditions.
Examples: Female Basketball Players, Attorneys, Teen Acne

Moms
Women
Men
Pregnancy/Post Partum
Teens
Athletes
Kids Professionals
Yoga Practitioners

Niches by Condition
You can narrow by combining conditions with demographic factors, or being more specific.
Examples: Kids' Allergies, Women Fatigue, Men's Weight Loss

ADD/ADHD
Alcohol/Substance Abuse
Aging/Longevity
Allergies
Anxiety/Panic
Arthritis
Asthma
Autism
Back and Neck Pain
Beauty and Skin
Bipolar Disorder
Blood Issues
Bone Issues
Brain and Nervous System
Cancer
Carpal Tunnel Syndrome
Constipation Depression
Diabetes
Diarrhea
Digestive System Issues
Eating Disorders
Energy Issues
Enlightenment
Epilepsy
Erectile Dysfunction
Eye Issues
Fatigue
Fibromyalgia
Fitness
Gallstones
Gas
Gout
Hair Loss
Headaches
Heart and Circulatory System
Hemorrhoids
Hepatitis
Herpes, Cold Sores
High Blood Pressure
HIV/AIDS
Hot Flashes
Immune System Disorders
Immune Strength/Colds
Infertility and Reproduction
Insomnia, Sleep Issues
Irritable Bowel Syndrome
Joint Issues
Kidney Issues
Knee Issues
Liver Issues
Lung Issues
Lyme Disease
Men's Health
Menopause
Multiple Sclerosis
Muscle Pain
Obesity
Pain Management
Parkinson's Disease
PMS
Pregnancy
Quit Smoking
Restless Leg Syndrome
Seasonal Affective Disorder
Sexual Health Issues
Skin Issues
Stress Management
Stroke
Tendonitis
Thyroid Issues
Ulcers
Urinary System Issues
Vertigo
Weight Gain
Weight Loss

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © jacobgriscom.com - All Rights Reserved.

Summary Report

In this chapter we covered the difference between focusing on teaching people about Ayurveda versus focusing on the needs of a niche market, and why the second is so much more effective for building a sustainable practice.

We discovered that picking a niche for our practice does limit our communication, but it improves our response and referrals.

We learned how to identify strong potential niches for our practice based on who we are and the personal successes we've had with our own health as well as helping our clients. Then finally, we narrowed these options down to our best niche.

When you completed the homework from this chapter you took the action to implement what you learned and picked the niche for your practice that you'll go on to research:

- Narrow Your Niche
- Ayurveda and Yoga Therapy Niches

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

2. Niche Research and Communication

Research Your Niche

After we've picked a niche for our practice, it's time to research the concrete and emotional needs of the people in our market. When we find and understand these needs we are "planning our success beforehand." We're making sure that we focus on the needs, goals, and challenges that our market is already motivated to address so that more of our prospective clients are naturally motivated and inspired to enroll in our programs.

If we don't find and understand these needs, or if we haven't gotten to the level that's specific and emotional, then it's less likely that our communication will resonate and speak directly with our audience. This means that we won't attract as many prospective clients, and those we do attract will be less naturally motivated or inspired to work with us.

Discovering Needs

A niche is made of needs, so where do we go to discover the needs of our market? We ask them.

Feelings reveal needs, and we're most concerned with "unmet" needs that are generating fear and frustration. These are the needs where our market is proactively looking for solutions, and they have few or no perceived options.

These needs are areas of pain that they want to move away from. They are concrete and specific symptoms and challenges that have had costs in their lives in the past, are impacting their lives now, and will potentially have an increasing impact or cost on their lives in the future if they are not addressed. They are negatively affecting their skills and abilities, their work, their relationships, and how they feel about themselves.

They are also areas of relief and improvement that they want to move towards. They are concrete and specific desired outcomes that they tie to relief and improvement in their lives. These are improvements that will have a positive impact on their skills and abilities, their work, their relationships, and how they feel about themselves.

We can discover our market's needs through online research in forums, newsletters, and products that are already being marketed effectively, along with our own surveys and interviews.

For example, let's say that our niche is "people with asthma." We want to discover the unmet needs that are generating fear and frustration, so we create a survey asking them questions like,

- "What are your biggest frustrations with having asthma?"
- "What are your fears about having asthma? What are you worried will happen if your asthma isn't addressed?"

We also want to learn what relief and improvement they are looking for, so we can ask,

- "What specific outcomes would you like to experience?"

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Finally, we want to know what they've already tried to address this condition, what's worked for them, and what hasn't:

- "What have you tried that's worked to relieve your symptoms?"
- "What have you tried that's hasn't worked for you?"

Then we can follow up with some of our survey respondents to go a little deeper in some 1-on-1 interviews. We're looking for that next layer of emotional need and impact, so we can ask questions like,

- "Why is that important to you? What other effects are these having on your life? Your work? Your relationships?"
- "What would it mean to you to have that outcome? What other benefits would that have in your life? Your work? Your relationships?"

Now, here are some other important places to get "our fingers on the pulse" of our market: online forums and local support groups, e-newsletters, and information products that target our market.

The online forums give us a way to read and participate in discussions around the needs and experiences of our prospective clients and local support groups give us a channel to meet them and learn from them in person. They are also an excellent place to find people to respond to our survey and interview requests.

Depending on our niche, we may be able to find a few or many other coaches, consultants, and experts who also target and serve our niche. Instead of simply viewing these people as competition, we can see them as resources and potential partners. Most of them will have some offer of free content or an e-newsletter. We want to subscribe to these and hear how other people are communicating to our market. What's their perspective? What do they emphasize? What products and services do they offer?

The final places to explore are the affiliate product marketplaces. Here we can find information products and coaching offerings that target our niche, and we can see which ones are the most popular. We can actually see directly which products are being bought the most by our prospective clients. We can read their sales letters, explore their products, and experience how they communicate and build relationships with their clients. This is incredibly valuable information, and to the degree that we can understand and perceive what they are doing we can consciously see and map our own success.

Again, these also represent potentially valuable partnerships and even mentorship opportunities. As we build our subscriber base, we may choose to offer them other information products or services that we've found valuable and earn an affiliate commission on sales. They may choose to promote our products and services as well if we've created offerings that are valuable to their subscribers. We may discover that we have a lot to gain from some of these experts and resources and find some important teachers and mentors who help us better serve our clients.

How to Research, Survey, and Interview Your Market

Here are the steps to take to research, survey, and interview your market:

1. Download the survey/interview questions template, and build a customized survey for your niche with a free account at surveymonkey.com.
2. Visit the largest affiliate product marketplace, clickbank.com, and type in keywords related to your niche. Explore the products and websites, and see which are the most popular.
3. Use Google to search for keywords related to your niche, plus words like "newsletter," "coach," "support," etc. (i.e. "asthma newsletter," "asthma coach," and "asthma support"). Visit some of the organic and paid listings do download some free content, subscribe to e-newsletters, and explore product and service offerings and marketing communications.
4. Use Google to search for keywords related to your niche, plus the word "forum" or "support group + your location" (i.e. "asthma forum," and "asthma support group + New York"). You can also search Google Groups, Yahoo! Groups, Facebook Groups, etc. Read and participate in the popular conversations, and ask people if they'd be willing to participate in your research survey and interviews.
5. Depending on your niche, you can get your survey out through your personal networks as well: your email list, Facebook, etc.

Take Action: Survey and Interview Template

It's time to implement what you've learned. Use the following template, "Surveys and Interviews" from the homework files and customize a survey for your niche with a free account at surveymonkey.com.

Then complete the following homework before continuing on to the next segment:

- Research 5-10+ affiliate products in clickbank.com
- Search for and explore 5-10 related websites targeting your niche and download their free content or subscribe to their e-newsletters
- Search for and explore 5-10 forums or support groups targeting your niche and start participating in conversations, visiting to meet people, and asking for participants for your research survey and interviews

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Template: Surveys and Interviews

Description: Use this template to customize a survey and interview questions for your niche. Open a free account at surveymonkey.com (or use Google Docs), and then distribute your survey and interview invitation through your networks and group forums. Make all responses optional, and use text fields for open answer responses.

<YOUR NICHE SURVEY TITLE>

<INTRODUCTORY LETTER>

Dear Friend,

Thank you for your participation in this research. Your responses are invaluable to us, and will help us create excellent programs and resources for <DESCRIBE YOUR NICHE>.

Email: If you would like us to stay in communication with you about these programs and resources, please include your name and email address.

Phone: If you'd be willing to participate in a short and confidential 15-30 minute phone interview, please also include your phone number.

<OPTIONAL INCENTIVE>: Phone interviews are especially helpful for this research, so to encourage your participation we will <DESCRIBE INCENTIVE> as our thank you for your important help.

<YOUR SIGNATURE>

1. Name:
2. Email:
3. Phone:
4. <Depending on your niche, what other data may be relevant to collect? male/female, age, location, weight, a checklist of symptoms and their intensity>
5. What's your biggest frustration with <your health or specific condition>?
6. What have you tried so far that hasn't worked for you? Is there anything that you've tried that has worked for you?
7. What's your biggest fear when it comes to <your health or specific condition>?
8. What worries you – what are you afraid will happen if this isn't addressed?
9. What would you be willing to do to improve <your health or specific condition>? And what improvements would you most like to see?
10. If you could have one question answered about <your health or specific condition>, what would it be?

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Your Niche's Needs

Now we take all of this information, simplify it, and condense it into a concentrated understanding of our market. When we do this we get a clear picture of our prospective clients and their needs so that our marketing communication is clear and effectively attracts clients.

If we don't have a condensed focus for our niche, then our marketing communication will tend to become too broad, non-specific, less relevant, and less effective at attracting clients.

Finding Trends and Patterns

From our surveys, interviews, and research into forums, support groups, e-newsletters, and information products we will see very clear trends and patterns emerge. We will discover a lot of needs, challenges, goals, and desires. We'll learn a lot of approaches and solutions.

Our task is to organize and rank these now so that we know where to put the greatest emphasis and most easily connect emotionally with our prospective clients. What are the top fears and frustrations that come up again and again in our surveys and interviews? What are the desired outcomes that we hear consistently? What are the costs these challenges have on their lives, and why is achieving these new results so important to them?

We also need to pay attention to the words our prospects are using. How are they describing their challenges, thoughts, and feelings?

And finally, we can see the trends and patterns in what other teachers, experts, coaches, and products emphasize. What messages and services are already effective at reaching and serving our niche? How well does this match up with what we've learned from our research?

How to Compile Your Results

Here's an effective way to compile your research results:

1. Organize your research results into two columns: fears and frustrations, goals and desires.
2. Look at the results from your survey and interviews, and put each response into one of these columns.
3. Group similar responses together.
4. Add products, services, and marketing communications from your research that target and address these categories.
5. Circle the categories with the greatest number of responses and underline the most powerful emotional needs.

Take Action: Niche Needs

Now take some time to compile your research results and form a concentrated understanding of your prospective clients and their needs. Complete the following exercise, "Niche Needs," exercise and follow the steps to organize your results and reveal the trends and patterns in the needs of your niche.

You'll use this understanding as the focus and foundation for all of your marketing communication, as well as content and program development. You'll also use it to clearly answer the question, "What do you do?

Exercise: Niche Needs

Description: Use this exercise to organize and understand the needs of your niche. Create categories from similar emphasis in your research, survey results, and interview responses.

Fears/Frustrations	Goals/Desires

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Template: The General Practitioner

I recommend picking a niche because it lays a foundation that makes everything easier: easier to become well-informed with less competition, easier to become known as the expert in that niche, easier to address the specific needs of your audience, easier to know where to develop marketing channels and partnerships, and easier to build community.

If a clear niche that's a fit has eluded you, then you can still clarify your marketing and communication around the dominant needs and most common health challenges for the majority of people.

They are:

1) Weight management
2) Fatigue/Energy
3) Pain relief
4) Sleep and Emotional Issues (Anxiety and Depression)

Each of these areas is a great niche in itself, and if you speak to all five of these areas you will include most people.

Example "What You Do" Statement and Opt-In Offer:

"I help people lose weight and have more energy so they can be free of pain, improve their sleep, and feel calm and clear. Do you know anyone who'd like to lose weight and have more energy?"

The headline on your website should identify the needs of the prospective client right away, and introduce your opt-in offer.

The opt-in on your website can be a free report, video, or audio related to the subjects of losing weight and having more energy, and how this relates to pain, sleep, and mood as well.

Here's Your First Step to Sustainable Weight Management, Abundant Energy, Deep Sleep, and Freedom from Pain.

This free report "Name of Report" reveals:

- Bullet 1
- Bullet 2
- Bullet 3
- Bullet 4

Enter your name and email address into this form and click "submit" to receive your free report now.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Communicate What You Do

The more effectively we can answer the question, "What do you do?" the more referrals we can quickly generate, the more value we can immediately communicate, and the faster we can become known as the "go to" person for the needs of our niche.

Instead, we will rarely generate referrals and communicate a confusing statement if we answer the question, "What do you do?" with our modality instead of our niche (i.e. "I'm an Ayurvedic practitioner.").

Speak to Your Niche

When someone asks us, "What do you do?" we want to answer in a way that helps automatically trigger two questions:

1. Am I your client?
2. Do I know your client?

In other words, after hearing a short response, they will automatically be able to decide whether our services might be valuable for them or for someone they know. This is such a simple and powerful approach that when we adopt this habit, we can automatically generate a flow of leads into our practice from our daily conversations.

To get these results our response needs to clearly identify our prospective client, the specific big emotional needs or challenges, and the most desired results. Then, we need to ask for the referral.

How to Communicate What You Do

Here's a formula for crafting a "What You Do" statement that sends you a flow of referrals from your daily conversations:

1. Start with, "I help/empower/support…" and then name your prospect and challenge (i.e. "…people with asthma…").
2. Then state the concrete desired results (i.e. "…breathe easily and eliminate tightness in their chest…").
3. Optional: You may add any additional important benefits (i.e. "…without steroids or inhalers.")
4. Finally, ask for the referral, "Do you know anyone with asthma?"

"What do you do?"

"I help people with asthma breathe easily and eliminate tightness in their chest without steroids or inhalers. Do you know anyone with asthma?"

Take Action: "What You Do Statement"

Great work! Now take a moment to put your research and understanding together to create your clear "What You Do" statement.

Use the following template "What You Do Statement" to build your answer to this question. Start using this and testing this immediately when you introduce yourself throughout your daily conversations.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Template: What You Do Statement

Description: Here's a formula for crafting a "What You Do" statement that sends you a flow of referrals from your daily conversations. Start using this immediately.

1. Start with, "I help/empower/support…" and then name your prospect and challenge (i.e. "…people with asthma…").
2. Then state the concrete desired results (i.e. "…breathe easily and eliminate tightness in their chest…").
3. Optional: You may add any additional important benefits (i.e. "…without steroids or inhalers.")
4. Finally, ask for the referral, "Do you know anyone with asthma?"

"What do you do?"

"I help people with asthma breathe easily and eliminate tightness in their chest without steroids or inhalers. Do you know anyone with asthma?"

Your "What You Do" Statement:

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Summary Report

In this chapter we learned where and how to research the needs of our niche, compile our results into a concentrated understanding of our prospective client, and communicate what we do so that our daily conversations generate a steady flow of leads.

This is the foundation for all of our marketing communication and service development. Everything is built from understanding the needs of our niche.

When you completed the homework from this chapter you took the action to implement what you learned. You researched the needs of your niche, created a concentrated focus on the strongest emotional needs, and crafted your clear and effective "What You Do" statement.

- Surveys and Interviews
- Niche Needs
- What You Do Statement

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

3. Your Economy and Qualifications

Succeeding in Poor Economies

If we know how to succeed at finding clients who are happy to invest in our services, regardless of the state of our local economy, then we will have a more reliable and sustainable practice.

If we target too limited a market, or if our communication is not clear and based on our market's needs, then we will have a hard time enrolling enough committed clients, and we will not have a reliable or sustainable practice.

In the last chapter, we discussed how to communicate so that we generate leads and clients from our daily conversations. In this section, let's discuss what to do when we're in a local market that's too small for our niche to succeed or an economy that's too poor to readily invest in our services.

Traveling and Working Virtually

If our local market is too small or local economy is too poor for our niche to succeed, we have some options:

We can move or travel: In other words, we can go where there is a greater number and concentration of our prospective clients who can invest in our services. We can actually move to a new community, or we can commute there to build our client and referral network.

We can broaden our market: If we've narrowed our niche too much for our local prospective client base, we can broaden it. If we were targeting women with Premenstrual Syndrome, then we can broaden to "Women's Reproductive Health," or even broader, "Women's Health." With a broader niche, we often trade in some of the specificity of our communication and the high response of our market, but we gain a greater span of prospective clients.

We can work virtually: For most practitioners, this is the best option. When we work virtually over the phone and Internet, we can keep a deep and specific niche with a high response from our target market. We also radically increase our prospective client base from our local community to potentially anyone in the world with a phone, the means, and the need to work with us.

How to Work with Clients Virtually

Here's how to start working with clients over the phone/internet:

1. Download Skype for free.
2. Buy one of their recommended headsets if your computer's speaker or microphone quality is insufficient, and buy a webcam if your computer does not come with one.
3. Get your client's Skype ID, find them on Skype, and add them as a Skype contact before your session.
4. Click to call your client or have them call you on Skype for their scheduled session.
5. Share video so that you can see each other. You'll be able to do everything that you normally do besides physically touch your client. You can also send files, instant message links, and even share your screen.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Take Action: Download and Practice Skype

If you're not already familiar with Skype, visit www.skype.com and download it now. Get comfortable with audio and video conversations and the different Skype features.

You can even use Skype for inexpensive phone calls, voice mail, and text messages as a convenient and affordable solution for your business telecom needs.

Understanding and Communicating Qualifications

When we are clear about what qualifications really matter to our clients, then we will feel confident and communicate value clearly and professionally. Our clients will hear us and see us as experts in our niche and view our programs and services as the exact thing they need to overcome their challenges and achieve their desired results.

However, when we're not clear about the qualifications that really matter to our clients, then we perpetually compare ourselves to more experienced teachers and practitioners. We imagine that we need far more education, training, and experience before we can actually be of service. We don't communicate value clearly or professionally, and so we are not seen as experts in our niche and people do not see how our programs and services could help them.

The Importance of Credentials

What really matters to our prospective clients when it comes to their decision to work with us or not? Is it the years we've spent in school? Is it the letters before or after our name?

These things can definitely provide some credibility, and the title "Doctor" carries some authority that can facilitate trust and confidence. But our years in school and the titles we've accumulated do not guarantee that we can help our clients overcome their challenges and achieve their desired results.

Our credentials are primarily important to us, not our clients. Our theoretical framework and understanding of imbalance and harmony and the behaviors and consciousness that lead to health or disease gives us an understanding of how to heal ourselves, and then how to help our clients.

Our clients are concerned first and foremost with our ability to help them. Our ability to first demonstrate results in our own lives, and then our track record of helping other people who are like them is infinitely more relevant and important than our title.

Since we're focused on supporting our clients' health and consciousness, we need to demonstrate some health and consciousness in our own lives. We shouldn't think that we need to be perfect, but we do need some commitment to our path. We need to have some energy, and look and feel naturally healthy for our age and circumstances. We need to be willing to look at and address any chronic psychological and emotional stress in our lives as well, and be willing to find help and support.

Without that, our credibility and integrity will be compromised. This is the most important qualification for ourselves and for our clients' decision to work with us. Since we often pick a niche where we have experience ourselves, our personal story and stories about the results other people have gotten working with us are the most powerful ways to communicate our qualifications to our market.

How to Tell Your Story

Here's a way to tell your story that communicates your qualifications and ability to help your clients get results:

1. When were you where they are now? Describe what was happening for you with your health and how it was impacting your life and how you felt.
2. What did you try that didn't work? Talk about your attempts and failures at addressing the problem.
3. What was your "aha" moment? Tell what you learned or discovered that was the changing point for you.
4. How did you get consistent results? Reveal the behaviors you changed and the system you developed to get them to stick.
5. Share how you've helped other people like them get consistent results with this system too (or how you've seen other people make these changes and get consistent results).
6. Tell them about your commitment to share this system with them so they can overcome these challenges and get these results for themselves.

Take Action: Qualifications Story

Take a moment to craft your own qualifications story. Complete the following exercise, "Qualifications Story," now.

You'll be able to tell your story in conversations, presentations, and in your marketing communications. Your story will serve to build credibility with your market, inspire them to take new actions in their lives, and most importantly, start working with you.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Exercise: Qualifications Story

Description: Our clients are not primarily interested in the years we've spent in school and the titles before or after our names. They are interested in getting needs met. Use this exercise to tell a relevant and inspiring "Qualifications Story" that builds rapport with your prospective clients. Show them how you have experienced similar challenges, how you were able to overcome those challenges, how you've helped others like them, and how you can help them get what they want too.

1. When were you where they are now? Describe what was happening for you with your health and how it was impacting your life and how you felt.

2. What did you try that didn't work? Talk about your attempts and failures at addressing the problem.

3. What was your "aha" moment? Tell what you learned or discovered that was the changing point for you.

4. How did you get consistent results? Reveal the behaviors you changed and the system you developed to get them to stick.

5. Share how you've helped other people like them get consistent results with this system too (or how you've seen other people make these changes and get consistent results).

6. Tell them about your commitment to share this system with them so they can overcome these challenges and get these results for themselves.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Summary Report

In this chapter we learned the mindset and strategies for overcoming two common obstacles that practitioners can let get in the way of success in their Ayurveda or Yoga therapy practice: small local market/poor economy and insufficient qualification or credentials.

Having an abundance of committed clients starts with communicating value to a sufficient number of people in our niche. The most valuable qualification in their mind is our ability to help them overcome their challenges and get results, and the most powerful way to communicate this is through the story of our own success and success with others like them.

When you completed the homework from this chapter you took the action to implement what you learned. You set yourself up to be able to work with clients virtually and you crafted your story in a way that's relevant and inspiring to your prospective clients so that they want to work with you.

- Skype software and optional hardware
- Qualifications Story

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Step 2: The Committed Client Formula

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

4. Your Behavioral Theory of Change

In this chapter, we're going to cover the process for developing a "behavioral theory of change" for our niche. This is a theory that describes the causes and reasons for our market's challenges, and the solutions that will generate the desired results.

When we do this well we become an expert and servant for our market. We're capable of providing the understanding and roadmap for our clients to get results. Of course, this is the main value that clients are interested in and it's a source of inspiration and motivation for them to change. When we can provide this to our clients we experience a clarity and confidence that comes through our communication, and attracts people to our practice.

If we don't have a well-developed theory of change for our niche, then we are not well equipped to serve our market. We can't provide an understanding or path to results that we ourselves don't have, and so our value to our clients is uncertain and limited. Without that value, how can we feel clear? Without clarity, how can we communicate with confidence? We really can't, and we won't be able to consistently attract and support clients.

Behaviors and Results

Once we understand the needs of our market, it's time to put our attention on serving those needs. The way that we attempt to serve these needs will be based on our understanding of the causes of the disease and the new behaviors that will lead to healing. Our behavioral theory of change is used to build our content and presentations as well as form our one-on-one and group programs and products.

In Ayurveda, we understand that after constitutional influences, our health is based on our consciousness and our daily behaviors that contribute to harmony or disharmony. Ayurveda describes three "pillars of health" (food, sleep, and sex) that are the important categories for us to consider.

The questions that we're seeking to answer are:

- Which dietary and lifestyle choices are contributing to these challenges? How and why is this?
- Which dietary and lifestyle choices will help resolve these challenges and create new results? How and why is this?

We can integrate modern science with Ayurvedic and Yogic wisdom and draw on our teachers, books and articles, online resources, and our own experience to answer these questions.

If our niche is Type 2 Diabetes, we want to develop a behavioral theory of change that describes the symptoms and pathology of Diabetes, the behaviors within the three pillars of health that can cause it, and the behaviors that can reverse it. We also want to understand the most important behaviors, the "high leverage" choices that most powerfully contribute to worsening or improving Diabetes because these are the areas where we can make the biggest impact with our clients.

We want to know the role of dietary choices on Diabetes:

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

- Which foods, drinks, and eating habits are the most damaging? And how and why is this?
- Which foods, drinks, herbs and supplements, and eating habits are the most helpful? And how and why is this?

We need to understand the role of rest and exercise on Diabetes:

- What sleeping and exercise habits are most harmful? And how and why is this?
- What sleeping and exercise habits are best? And how and why is this?

And finally, we want to know how sex and vital energy practices relate to Diabetes:

- What impact does emotional stress have on Diabetes? How and why?
- What impact can meditation and breath have on Diabetes? How and why?

How to Create Your Behavioral Theory of Change

Here's a step-by-step process for building a Behavioral Theory of Change for your niche:

1. Define your niche (Step 1: Map Your Market)
2. Describe the main challenges/symptoms for your niche (Step 1: Map Your Market)
3. Describe the main desired results for your niche (Step 1: Map Your Market)
4. Research the Food pillar: list the best and worst behaviors, and explain why
5. Research the Sleep pillar: list the best and worst behaviors, and explain why
6. Research the Sex pillar: list the best and worst behaviors, and explain why

Take Action: Behavioral Theory of Change Worksheet

Now get started building a Behavioral Theory of Change for your niche. Complete the next exercise, "Behavioral Theory of Change".

Your Behavioral Theory of Change outlines the topics that you will use for your content, presentations, programs, and products. Once you have it completed you'll be much more clear and confident about how you help your clients.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Exercise: Behavioral Theory of Change Worksheet

Description: This exercise will help you map and clarify a Behavioral Theory of Change for your niche. For each Pillar of Life category list the behaviors that contribute to the challenges and why, and then do the same for the behaviors that contribute to the desired results. When you're done, circle the "high leverage" behaviors that have the biggest impact.

Niche:

Main Challenges (symptoms):

Desired results:

Food

What are the worst foods and drinks, and why?

What are the worst eating habits, and why?

What are the best foods, drinks, herbs, and supplements, and why?

What are the best eating habits, and why?

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Sleep
What are the worst sleeping habits, and why?

What are the worst exercise habits, and why?

What are the best sleeping habits, and why?

What are the best exercises habits, and why?

Sex
How does stress affect these challenges, and why?

How can meditation and breathing help, and why?

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Summary Report

In this chapter we discussed the importance of creating a Behavioral Theory of Change as a roadmap for helping our clients overcome their challenges and achieve their desired results. The homework covers the process for clearly identifying and understanding the important topics that we need to become an expert in our niche and confidently communicate the value of our services so that we attract, inspire, and motivate clients.

- Behavioral Theory of Change Worksheet

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

5. Designing Content Using a Framework

In this chapter, we're going to introduce a framework we can use to write and deliver articles and reports, workshops and presentations, and private and group programs for our prospects and clients. When we follow this framework, our message is most likely to be understood and perceived as valuable, we will be referred more leads, more leads will become prospective clients, more prospects will enroll as clients, and more clients will achieve better results.

In fact, when we don't use each of the elements in this framework, we take much longer to write and deliver our content and consultations. At the same time, we are less clear and our message is misunderstood and not seen to be of clear value, so of course we are referred fewer leads, generate fewer prospects, enroll fewer clients, and our clients are less committed and don't get the best results.

The 4 Learning Styles Framework

A framework is an essential supporting structure. In construction the framework holds up a house, and in content creation it holds up your message so that it does what you want it to and doesn't fall apart. There are a number of different frameworks available for building content, but perhaps the most important is the "4 Learning Styles."

The 4 Learning Styles comes from the work of David Kolb, a Harvard psychologist, whose studies showed that most people have a dominance of 1 of 4 different learning styles. And like our Ayurvedic constitution these learning styles correlate with tendencies for what we emphasize in our learning and also in our teaching.

The "Why?" learning style asks the question, "Why do I need to learn this?" If we have a strong "Why?" learning style then we want to be motivated. We will be most interested in learning and teaching about the pain and pleasure that will be avoided or experienced based on whether we learn or do not learn this information.

The "What?" learning style asks the question, "What is the theory and history with this?" If we have a strong "What?" learning style then we want to understand at a conceptual level. We will be most interested in learning and teaching about the system, how the pieces fit together, and the history and evidence for these theories.

The "How?" learning style asks the question, "How do I do this?" If we have a strong "How?" learning style then we want to know how to follow steps from beginning to end. We will be most interested in learning and teaching about the practical step-by-step process.

The "What If?" learning style asks the question, "What if I actually do this?" If we have a strong "What If?" learning style then we want to have an experience. We will be most interested in learning and teaching through implementation and experience.

We need to learn through all 4 Learning Styles to be effective. We need to be motivated to learn, we need to understand what we're learning, we need to know the practical steps to get results, and we need to take action and gain real experience. We need all of these elements anytime we want to effectively learn anything.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

We also need to teach through all 4 Learning Styles to be effective. We need to motivate our audience by connecting their health to their pleasures and pains, help them understand the theory of improving their health, give them very clear and practical steps for changing their behavior, and provide accountability for them to take action. We need all of these elements anytime we want to effectively teach anything.

How to Build Valuable Content

Here's a step-by-step process for building valuable content using the 4 Learning Styles framework. Use this for chunks of content such as sections of an article or a consultation recommendation to a client, as well as an outline for workshops and presentations:

1. Write your "Why?" section first:
    a. List the most important concrete pains and challenges that will be avoided and the pleasures and benefits that will be experienced when your audience learns and implements what you're about to teach them.
    b. Then state the reverse and list the pleasures and benefits that will get away from them and the pains and challenges that will appear, remain, or get worse if your audience does not learn and implement what you're about to teach them.

(For examples, reread the first section in this chapter and the other chapters of this textbook.)

2. Write your "What?" section second:
    a. Use your behavioral theory of change to explain your concept and the behavior that is causing the pains and challenges, along with your best understanding of the underlying disease process.
    b. Then explain the concept and behavior that will create relief and new benefits, and your understanding of reversing the underlying disease process.
    c. Use history, case studies, and statistics to provide evidence and reinforce your explanation.

3. Write your "How?" section third: Provide clear and numbered step-by-step instructions for exactly what to do to change the behavior.

(For examples, study this current section and the How To sections in the other chapters of this textbook.)

4. Write your "What If?" section last: Tell your audience what specific action they need to take right now to actually implement the process and experience the results.

Take Action: Free Report Template

The first place for you to implement what you've learned in this chapter is with your "Free Report" which you'll use as a free giveaway on your website in exchange for contact information. This is the process of lead generation that we'll discuss more in Step 3.

Use the following template, "Your Free Report" to draft your Free Report now.

Template: Free Report

Description: Use this template to write your Free Report that you'll use on your website as a lead generation tool in exchange for your prospective client's email address. You can also use this 4 Learning Styles framework for your consultations, presentations, and workshops.

1. Write your "Why?" section first:
    a. List the most important concrete pains and challenges that will be avoided and the pleasures and benefits that will be experienced when your audience learns and implements what you're about to teach them.

    b. Then state the reverse and list the pleasures and benefits that will get away from them and the pains and challenges that will appear, remain, or get worse if your audience does not learn and implement what you're about to teach them.

2. Write your "What?" section second:
    a. Use your behavioral theory of change to explain your concept and the behavior that is causing the pains and challenges, along with your best understanding of the underlying disease process.

    b. Then explain the concept and behavior that will create relief and new benefits, and your understanding of reversing the underlying disease process.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

c. Use history, case studies, and statistics to provide evidence and reinforce your explanation.

3. Write your "How?" section third: Provide clear and numbered step-by-step instructions for exactly what to do to change the behavior.

Step 1)
Step 2)
Step 3)
Step 4)
Step 5)

4. Write your "What If?" section last: Tell your audience what specific action they need to take right now to actually implement the process and experience the results.[1]

[1] In Step 3 you will learn the "Free Session Offer" and can use that for your "What If?" section of your Free Report, or as the closing offer during a presentation.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Summary Report

In this chapter we discussed the importance of using the 4 Learning Styles framework to design and deliver your content. The homework guides you through the process of using this framework to build your "Free Report," which you'll use as a free giveaway on your site to generate prospective client leads.

- Free Report Template

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

6. Naming Your Concepts and Content

Now that we've covered how to design our content, we need to talk about how to package up our content and concepts and effectively name these for our market.

A great name makes our ideas and products "stickier" so that they remain in people's minds and awareness. It also radically increases the perceived value of the ideas and service. This combination of stickiness and increased value generates and retains more leads, clients, and referrals because people are more likely to think of us when they think about their health needs and challenges. They're also more likely to think of us when they're hearing about health needs and challenges from others.

When we don't name our content and concepts, we don't benefit from this sticky value-increasing effect. As a result, our ideas and services get grouped together with other people and concepts that our market is already familiar with, and what we are offering is not perceived as unique and valuable. This means that will miss out on passive opportunities to generate and retain more leads, clients, and referrals.

Principles for Powerful Names

Results-oriented
Rhyme Rhythm
Alliteration

What to Name

Your concepts
Your free reports and presentations
Your free sessions
Your programs
Your business
Your title

Take Action: Naming Worksheet

Complete the following exercise, "Content and Concept Naming" to brainstorm names for the categories listed above.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Exercise: Content and Concept Naming

Description: Naming your content and concepts builds your "brand" and increases the perceived value. Use this worksheet to brainstorm names that include one or more of these elements. Write as many words as you can think of and use a thesaurus to come up with more. Then mix and match to find some unforgettable names.

Use Result-Oriented, Distinctive "Power Words" In Your Name:
Use Repetitive Sounds - Alliteration & Rhyme In Your Name:
Use Rhythm In Your Name:
Use Powerful Unconscious Associations In Your Name:

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

7. Building Your Private Client Coaching Program

Key concepts:

Instead of offering individual sessions, create and offer "committed long-term programs" of 3 months, 6 months, or even 12 months at a time. Programs are more sustainable for our practices, and essential for our clients to make sustainable changes with their behaviors and health priorities.

The client's needs and motivation determine the course and pace of the program. Our role is to ask questions about what they want and why. Our role is to ask questions about challenges and their implications. Our role is not to take responsibility for the clients' health.

Integral Ayurveda Coaching: think in terms of 4 quadrants of support – behavioral, consciousness, relationships, and systems

Behavior quadrant: Have clients plan behaviors in detail, with rituals as described in "Getting Started."

Consciousness quadrant: Listen and ask questions about any areas where clients are blaming people or circumstances for their actions.

Relationships quadrant: In addition to their relationship with you, where else can they get support for a new behavior?

Systems quadrant: What do they need to add in or take out of their schedule and physical environments to make the new behavior a priority?

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Template: New Client Paperwork

Contact Information

First Name:	Last Name:
Address:	City, State, Zip:
Primary Phone:	Secondary Phone:
Email:	Date of Birth:
Marital/Partner Status:	Children/Ages:
Pregnant: YES/NO	Occupation:

Past Medical History – Include Dates and Details

Diagnosed Illnesses:
Hospitalizations: Operations:

Family History – Circle and Indicate Family Member

Cancer:
Diabetes:
High Blood Pressure:
Heart Disease:
Stroke:
Mental Disorder:
Other:

Current Digestive and Psychological/Emotional Health Challenges - Check

	Abdominal Pain		Diarrhea		Self-destructive
	Belching		Unformed stool		Irritable
	Regurgitation		Rectal pain		Anger
	Gas		Bloody stool		Resentment
	Burning Indigestion		Mucous stool		Jealousy/Envy
	Vomiting		Unusual stool color		Critical
	Nausea		Worry		Intense
	Heavy after eating		Anxiety/Fear		Sadness
	Low energy after eating		Overwhelm		Depression
	Bloating		Spacey		Greediness
	Constipation		Insomnia		Lethargy

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Other Current Health Challenges

Physical:
Psychological/Emotional:

Health Goals

Physical:
Psychological/Emotional:

Health Habits – Circle and Describe

Caffeine: YES/NO
Alcohol: YES/NO
Tobacco: YES/NO
Other Substances: YES/NO
Exercise: YES/NO

Diet – Describe What is Typical

Breakfast:
Lunch:
Dinner: Snacks:
Water and Beverages:
Eating Routines:

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Daily Routine

	Time	Activities	Variations
Morning
Afternoon
Evening

Sex and Spiritual Practice – Describe Practice and Frequency

Sexual Activity/Practice:
Spiritual Practice:

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Current Medication, Herbs, Supplements

Substance	OTC/ Prescription	Herb/ Drug/ Vitamin	Prescribed By	Purpose	Duration of Use	Dosage	Benefits/ Side Effects

Notes – Use This Space for Anything Else You'd Like to Share

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Template: Informed Consent Form

Integral Ayurvedic Health Coaching through <Business Name>

All clients who participate in Integral Ayurvedic health coaching through this program should be advised of the following information:

Your program may include lifestyle adjustments, dietary changes, herbs, color therapy, sound therapy, aroma therapy, massage therapy, and other natural therapeutics, along with support for overcoming inner obstacles and cultural and environmental challenges that could sabotage long term sustainable change and results.

<Practitioner Name> is not a medical doctor and cannot: perform surgery or invasive treatments; prescribe, administer, or recommend the discontinuation of controlled substances and drugs prescribed by a licensed health care professional; or cause a risk of injury, mental or physical illness, or death.

No state-recognized educational and training standards exist for Ayurveda.

You have the right to choose to go to a licensed provider of health care, and if you are suffering from a disease or symptom that has not been evaluated by a medical doctor, you will be required to go or sign an acknowledgment that one was recommended to you.

<Practitioner Name> has completed the following training and certification programs:

<Program>
<Program>
<Program>

I have read and understand the above information and give my permission to begin a program of Integral Ayurvedic health coaching with <Practitioner Name> of <Business Name>.

Client's Signature: _____

Print Name: _____

Date of Signature: _____

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Step 3: The Sales Sadhana System

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

8. Your Website and Email List

Key Concepts:

Your website's job is to generate leads for your business. If it's not doing that, it's not doing it's job.

To generate leads your website's home page needs to do 3 things right away: identify the client and their main health concern, make them a free offer to address this concern, ask for their name and email address to receive the free offer.

Leads build your email list, and your email list is the main way to keep in touch with prospective clients.

Emails to your clients should include relevant articles, tips, and insights about specific health concerns instead of general lifestyle tips.

Unless you're generating a lot of content, stand alone emails get more response than newsletters because people are only getting one thing to read at a time.

Special offers for free sessions, presentations, workshops, or programs should always be sent as stand alone emails, and should be sent 3 times for best response.

A "last chance" email is almost always the email that gets the highest response.

Email content should follow the 4 Learning Styles template to ensure a valuable "complete communication."

Use an email marketing provider to manage your email list and the delivery of your content. Do not use your personal email software for this.

Click the "Website Solution" link on the membership site for our preferred all-in-one website design and platform provider.

Take Action:

Use the following template, "Opt-In Page and Headlines" to develop content for your home page, as well as the sidebar for every page of your website.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Template: Opt-In Page and Headlines

Description: Your opt-in page is the place where you send prospective clients from any of your marketing and networking channels so that they can get something free and valuable from you and get on your email list. The more targeted and compelling your opt-in offer, the higher your conversion rate (the percentage of people who opt-in when they visit your site). Use this template and these headline ideas to create a high conversion opt-in page!

"Use One Of The Effective Headline Templates Below And Center It At The Top Of Your Opt-In Page. Use Bold, Capitalization Of Each Word, Quotes, And Large Text To Grab Attention. State That You Can Meet Your Prospective Clients' Need." With This Free Report <Name of Free Report>, you'll discover how to: • <Concrete challenge to overcome> • <Concrete challenge to overcome> • <Specific desired result to achieve> • <Specific desired result to achieve> • <BIG specific and emotional desired result to achieve>	(Put Your Opt-In Form Over Here) Where Should I Send This? Enter your name and email address below and click "Get Instant Access" First Name: Last Name: Email: [Get Instant Access] (Include your email management provider's privacy policy link.)

(This space can be used for your picture, your "what you do" statement, and strong client testimonials.)

"I help <prospective clients> overcome <concrete challenges> and achieve <specific desired results>."

\- Your Name and Title

Testimonial #1
Testimonial #2
Testimonial #3

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Effective Headline Template #1

"Attention: <Prospective Clients>"

"Finally…Here's A Way To Get <describe the specific desired result> And Eliminate <describe their concrete challenge> Starting Right Now…"

Effective Headline Template #2

"Have/Do/Are You <describe their concrete challenge>?"

"In <name of your opt-in offer> I'll Reveal A Step-by-Step Approach To Getting <specific desired result> With/Without/Within <specific convenience that addresses a strong objection beforehand>."

Effective Headline Template #3

"If You're A <prospective client> Who's Ready To <overcome concrete problem>, This Free <opt-in offer> Will Reveal 3 Simple Steps To <achieve specific emotional desired result>."

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

9. Introductory Events and Free Session Offers

Key Concepts:

Introductory events, such as free local talks or online webinars or teleconferences, are some of the best ways to grow your list and generate new clients.

Use the 4 Learning Styles framework to develop your events.

The "What if?" call-to-action at the end of any introductory event is your free session offer.

Take Action

Follow the following template, "Free Session Offer" and begin offering free sessions periodically to your email list and at the end of every free introductory event.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Exercise: Free Session Offer

Description: The Sales Sadhana is the process that turns a prospective client into a happily paying committed client. The free session offer is a compelling invitation to sign up for the Sales Sadhana.

Here's how to create your free session offer:

1. So that you and your clients value your time, always give a reason for your free session offers. For example, it can be a bonus for another product or service that's purchased, and it can come at the end of one of your free talks or presentations.

2. Write your free session offer using the guidelines for designing content, including:

    - Using language that is concrete, specific, emotional, and results-oriented
    - Naming it

3. Use the 4 learning styles.

    - Why? – Results and Challenges
      "If you want to successfully implement the behaviors that will help you overcome <challenges> and get <desired results>, I'd like to support you."

    - What? – Concepts and Evidence

      "Because <reason that you're offering the free session>, I am offering you a free 1 hour <name of your session> to help you clarify your vision and goals for your health, set key milestones that will let you know you're getting results, and uncover any hidden obstacles that could sabotage your success. You'll leave the session with renewed clarity, inspiration, and the motivation to move forward."

      <Testimonial 1>
      <Testimonial 2>

    - How? – Action Steps

      "To claim your free 1 hour <name of your session>, follow these 5 steps:
        - 1) Click the link below
        - 2) Choose an available time that works for you
        - 3) Enter your contact information
        - 4) Submit your scheduled appointment and mark your calendar
        - 5) Come to <address> (or be available for my call) on <appointment date> at <appointment time>."

    - What If? How to sign up for the free session and availability

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

"I want to serve as many people as possible, but my time is limited, so this free session offer is on a first come, first serve, basis. If you want to successfully implement the behaviors that will help you overcome <challenges> and get <desired results>, click <this link> now."

4. Close and end with your signature:

Susan Something, "Anxiety Eliminator"
The Anxiety Elimination Program
P: 555.555.5555
Email: susan@anxietyelimination.com
AnxietyElimination|Facebook|LinkedIn

"I help people with anxiety eliminate it from the root and live deeply relaxed and productive lives. If you know someone with anxiety please help them get relief now at www.anxietyelimination.com."

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

10. Enrolling New Clients with the Sales Sadhana

To have a sustainable Ayurveda or Yoga Therapy practice we need committed clients who will enroll in our long-term programs. If we can enroll clients we'll have a sustainable practice, and if we can't, we won't. For us to be able to enroll clients in committed programs we need to understand the value for them and they need to understand the value for themselves.

If that can happen then the enrollment is a natural process, and next step that makes sense for what they want in their life. If it doesn't happen, then it will be forced or impulsive and based on curiosity or anxiety rather than a drive to take a new and necessary direction in life.

This is a significant investment of time, money, and energy on the part of the client and requires a significant amount of motivation. We're talking about changing longstanding behaviors and habits that are known and familiar, and that can feel really out of control and threatening. The only way that someone will decide to make this sort of commitment is through connecting with the cost of their current behaviors and the payoff of new behaviors.

Motivation to Change

The Sales Sadhana eliminates external pressure and uncovers internal pressure, or "motivation." There is no selling in the form or convincing or manipulation. Our attitude is as a servant and a scientist discovering what someone wants and why. The process is designed based on scientific studies of successful major account salespeople that lead to the formation of the SPIN selling process.

SPIN = Situation, Problem, Implications, and Need payoff

Situation: We want to start with some understanding of a person's life, how they are spending their time, and what they are prioritizing.

Problem: The reason a client is coming to us is that they have some problems that are causing them trouble that they want to resolve. If we can't clearly identify the problems, we won't have a clear reason for working together.

Implications: The most important factor for motivation is clarifying the cost of problems. What are the problems caused by the problems? If someone is overweight, that's a problem, but why? What trouble is it causing them? How does it impact their work, their relationships, how they feel about themselves? And what additional implications do those impacts have? We need to keep going and connecting these implications until the full weight and impact of the health challenge is realized. That's when motivation to shift priorities and do something about it emerges. This is the essential element in the success of the Sales Sadhana.

Need Payoff: Need payoff is the reverse of implication. In other words, when health goals are realized, why will that be important to them? What will they be able to do? What doors will open? What weights will be lifted? How will they feel? This is also a very important source of motivation.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

How to Have a Sales Sadhana Conversation

1. The Sales Sadhana starts with an introduction and clarification of the reason for meeting:

Today we are going to talk a little bit about where you are with your health, the challenges that you're experiencing and some of the impact this is having in your life. We'll also clarify your goals and vision for your health and why these are important to you. If it's a priority for you to address these challenges and move towards your goals we can discuss working together. How does that sound?

2. Then go on to learn about the client's life situation:

Tell me a little bit about your life. What is your schedule like during a typical week?
What are your priorities?

3. Then ask about health problems:

What sort of physical health challenges are you facing now?
How are you feeling?

4. Spend the most time exploring the implications of these problems:

How long have you struggled with these challenges?
Why are they a problem for you?
How do they impact your life?
What are you concerned will happen if you don't address these challenges?

5. Then help them clarify a vision and health goals:

What is your vision for your health?
What specific goals would you like to achieve?

6. Spend some time exploring the need payoffs of achieving these health goals:

How would it be important or valuable to you to have these results?
What do you think would be different in your life?

7. The next part of the conversation is to introduce your program as a path for overcoming these challenges and achieving these goals.

My program is designed to help you establish your health as a priority in your life so that you can make the changes you need to overcome these challenges and move towards these goals. Would you like to hear a little bit about it?

8. Introduce the process of your program and confirm value with the client.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

When I work with my clients I focus on 4 areas:

Behavior – I will help you identify and understand the behaviors that are currently contributing to your health challenges and the changes that will help you move towards your goals. We'll focus on the highest leverage behaviors that make the biggest impact first. Do you have any questions about that, and would that be valuable to you?

Consciousness – I will help you uncover and understand any hidden obstacles or resistance you have to making changes that will help you move towards your goals. Do you have any questions about that, and would that be valuable to you?

Relationships – I will help you take responsibility for your health by identifying any areas where you are blaming people or circumstances for your behaviors so that you can be empowered to make changes. Do you have any questions about that, and would that be valuable to you?

Systems – I will help you modify your environments and schedule so that they support your priority for health instead of working against you. Do you have any questions about that, and would that be valuable to you?

9. Ask them if they'd like to hear about the structure of the program and confirm value.

I work with my clients for 6 months at a time and we meet together for 1 hour at the same time each week so that there is a consistent anchor to feed the priority for health and consciousness. Do you have any questions about that, and would that be valuable to you?

10. Invite them to move forward and cover the guarantee and payment options.

Do you want to make this a priority and move forward?

We can discuss my guarantee and payment options. I'd like to work with you for a full month, and if you don't love the work that we are doing together or decide your health is no longer a priority, then you are not obliged to continue the program and I will refund anything that you've paid so far. Do you have any questions about that?

You have two options for payment: You can pay on a monthly basis at ($ amount) or you can get special pricing for a full payment at ($ amount). Which would be the best fit for you?

11. Then enter them into your system, collect payment, schedule a time for the weekly sessions, and give them your new client paperwork to complete before the first official session.

Complete this paperwork before we meet next week. If you have any questions you can reach me at … I'm looking forward to working with you.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Exercise: Sales Sadhana Outline

Description: The following steps use SPIN questions to help build your prospective clients' understanding of the value of moving forward with their health care program and the costs of not taking action.

Preparation

- Open the body, relax, and ground to create a field of presence.
- Be authentically curious, ask more questions than give information, hear the individual, and feel the consciousness underneath the words – this will allow the motivation to come from inside the prospective client instead of outside from you.
- Want this work for the other person far more than you want this client for your business.

Part I

1. Start with an introduction about what you will be covering.
2. Learn about their life situation.
3. Ask about their health problems.
4. Explore the implications of these problems.
5. Clarify their heath vision and goals.
6. Explore the need payoffs of achieving these goals.

Part II

7. Introduce your program as a path to overcoming these problems and achieving these goals.
8. Introduce the process and confirm value.
9. Introduce the structure and confirm value.
10. Invite them to move forward and cover your guarantee and payment options.

Then schedule their first official session, enter their information into your system, collect their payment, and give them the new client paperwork to complete.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

11. Earning a Great Living with Your Practice

Key Concepts:

There are lots of ways to earn a great living with your practice: high rates for a few private clients, medium rates for group clients, and a range of rates for products. Start with private clients and grow your business model from there.

Professional private coaching rates across various industries average around $500 - $1500 per month.

Money is a way that we value and prioritize things in our lives. If clients' don't invest good money, then they are less likely to make the program and their health a priority. They are less likely to implement new behaviors and get new results.

When you are stressed about money you are not available to serve your clients.

Clients are not investing in you or your programs. They are investing in a structure to make their health a priority, make changes in behavior, and get new results.

Example of a practice structure with depth, time freedom, and leverage:

10 private clients per month ($500 x 10 = $5000)
1 term group program per month with 10 clients ($100 x 10 = $1000)
1 ongoing membership program with 50 clients ($50 x 50 = $2500)
Product sales ($50 Average purchase x 100 monthly sales = $5000)

Total = $13500 per month

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Step 4: Multiply Your Marketing

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

12. Business Metrics: Follow Your Numbers

Key Concepts:

Track your monthly numbers: visitors to your website, participants in free events, total new leads, total new clients, total revenue, marketing expenses, total expenses.

From these numbers you'll know:

how many visitors it takes to get a lead how many leads it takes to get a free event participant how many leads it takes to get a client the average monthly revenue per client

how much it costs to get a visitor how much it costs to get a lead how much it costs to get a free event participant how much it costs to get a client

These numbers will greatly aid your ability to make advertising decisions and partnership agreements.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

13. Client Testimonials and Referrals

One of the most powerful sources for new clients is your existing client base. What your clients say about you to others is 10 times as powerful as what you say about yourself, so you want to be sure they say great things and share what they say with others.

Testimonial Tips

When you're supporting your clients they will automatically tell you and email you about the incredible results and experiences they are having. These are testimonials!

Ask your clients if you can use their testimonial in your materials, and if they'd be willing to submit their testimonial as a LinkedIn recommendation.

Ask them what information they feel comfortable using (the more you use, the more "real" they are, and the more powerful)

Initials or combination of initials and first name/last name
Location
Picture
Audio or Video testimonial

The most powerful testimonials include concrete, specific, emotional, results! When you get testimonials with these elements, prioritize them in your materials. Before and after stories are also very powerful (i.e. "Before working with you, I had <insert challenges and costs>, and thanks to our work together I now have <insert results and impact>!")

Where to use your testimonials:

Landing Page / Website
All Printed Materials
Digital Materials (i.e. Free Report) and Emails
Speaking: In Person Presentations, Teleconferences, Networking Events (Tell success stories)

Referrals

The best time to ask for referrals is when you receive a testimonial. (i.e. "It is such a pleasure to work with you, and I'm so happy to hear these incredible results. If you know anyone else who would benefit from this work, would you be willing to introduce us or send them to my site? www.greatlandingpage.com"

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

14. Business Cards, Brochures, and Signatures

Email Signature Template

Every time you send out an email, you represent yourself and your business, so it's a great idea to make that representation as professional and effective as possible at getting prospective clients into your system so they subscribe to your list, come to your events, and enroll in your programs.

Here's how!

DO NOT:

- Use a generic personal address from gmail, hotmail, yahoo, etc.
- Use an irrelevant quote in your signature
- Use images in your signatures
- Use backgrounds for your emails

DO USE THE FOLLOWING TEMPLATE:

Template:	Examples:
<Your Name>, <Your Niche-Oriented Title> <Your Business or Program Name> <Your Business Phone Number>* <Your Business Email> <Landing Page Link>| <Business Page Facebook Link>| <LinkedIn Page Link> "<Your What You Do Statement and/or Compelling Opt In Offer>"	Jacob Griscom, Ayurveda Business Coach Everyday Ayurveda - President P: 530.265.4847 EverydayAyurveda|Facebook|LinkedIn "I help Ayurvedic practitioners build successful and transformative businesses for themselves, their clients, and their communities!" Susan Something, "Anxiety Eliminator" The Anxiety Elimination Program P: 555.555.5555 Email: susan@anxietyelimination.com AnxietyElimination|Facebook|LinkedIn "I help people with anxiety eliminate it from the root and live deeply relaxed and productive lives. If you know someone with anxiety please help them get relief now at www.anxietyelimination.com."

*You can create professional email addresses for any urls (website addresses) that you own. You can purchase your urls from your web host.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Business Cards and Brochures

Business cards and brochures are essential for your in person networking opportunities. Their purpose is to:

- Get your prospective clients to identify themselves
- Get people who know your prospective clients to introduce you or your work to them
- Get your prospective clients to take action (i.e. visit your landing page and opt-in to join your list)

Business Card Elements:

- Your picture or business logo
- Your phone number, email, and address
- Your "What You Do" statement
- A call to action and compelling reason to visit your landing page

Brochure Elements: The same as your business card, but you can expand to include more content using the 4 Learning Styles.

Why? – Start by talking about the concrete, specific, emotional, results that you help your prospective clients achieve and the challenges that you help them overcome. Your "What You Do" statement accomplishes this and is great to include on the front fold of your brochure, along with your picture.

What? – Give an overview of your "Behavioral Theory of Change," including:

- The challenges your prospective clients face, the cost of those challenges, the behaviors that cause those challenges, and how and why that is.
- The desired results your prospective clients want, the impact they have, the behaviors that cause those challenges, and how and why that is.
- Include your strongest client testimonials that talk about the challenges they had and the results they've gotten working with you.

How? – Tell them what they can do with you: 1) Get your compelling opt-in offer, 2) Attend your next free presentation, 3) Join your one-on-one or group program.

What If? – Give them the immediate action to take now: "Visit <your landing page> and opt-in to get <your compelling free opt-in offer>."

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

15. Advertising

The "Deals" Strategy

Particularly if you offer body or skin therapies, "Daily Deals" companies (see Business Resources) are a great way to get a rush of new clients. If you don't personally do body or skin therapies, consider partnering with someone who does to access this opportunity.

How it Works: Daily deals companies work by promoting an offer for your services at a discounted rate to their list of subscribers in your metropolitan region. You split the income with the Daily Deals company, and they send you a check in the next few days after your daily deal has closed.
Here's a way to effectively use this opportunity to manage the rush of new clients, and convert them from one time customers to committed long term clients:

1. Contact a "Daily Deals" company and negotiate a deal to promote and a date to start the promotion. (Or have a partner complete this step.)
2. Set up your scheduling application (see Business Resources) to automate scheduling new clients into the times you want to fill in your schedule.
3. Make sure you've created a great name for your free 1 hour session and have practiced the Sales Sadhana process.
4. When your daily deal closes and the new clients start coming into your schedule, email* them your free 1 hour session offer and your scheduling link, or direct them to a landing page to opt-in to your list to receive the scheduling link. (If you are working with a partner, have them offer your free 1 hour session to their new clients and give them printed directions for how and why to claim their free session with you.)
5. When the free session clients start coming into your schedule practice the Sales Sadhana and enroll them into your program as happily paying committed clients. It doesn't matter if this happens before or after the body or skin therapy session.

* Use the Free Session Offer template.
 Everyday Ayurveda can do this for you. (See the Website Services page.)

Pay-Per-Click (PPC) Ad Campaigns

Pay-per-click (PPC) ads are one of the fastest ways to get targeted traffic to your landing page. They work by targeting "keywords" and search queries in the major search engines (Google and Yahoo! Search/Bing) and demographics and interests on Facebook to display your ads to prospective clients. All of the PPC options allow you to limit your ad campaigns by region, which is important for a local in person practice.
T
he cost-per-click (CPC) that you pay in based on the amount of competition for your market or keywords and the effectiveness, or click through rate (CTR), of your ad. The lower your competition and the higher your click through rate, the lower your cost-per-click will be.

Here's how to create and manage your PPC ad campaigns:

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Facebook

Facebook PPC ads are focused on demographics, interests, and connections. If your niche is "condition-based" (i.e. Diabetes), focus on the demographics where the condition is most prevalent (i.e. 26.9% of all people age 65 and older have diabetes) and target related interests and connections.

1) Create a Facebook page (see Social Media Guide) because sending traffic to a Facebook page costs less than sending people directly to an external website.
2) Optimize your Facebook landing page with your compelling opt-in offer and opt-in form, and set this page as the default. Outsource this step to someone who knows "FBML" (Facebook Markup Language).
3) Click the option to promote your page and you'll be brought to the Facebook ads section.
4) Design your ad:
    a. Destination: Select your Facebook page
    b. Type: Facebook Ads
    c. Destination Tab: Default
    d. Title: This will automatically be the title of your Facebook page
    e. Body: Use concrete, specific, emotional, results-oriented language in your ad copy…What do they want that they will get?
    f. Image: Start with your professional picture
5) Target your ad:
    a. Location: Choose your country, state, and city. Create a separate ad for each city that you serve (unless the estimated reach is under 1000 people).
    b. Demographics: Select the demographics for your target market. To reduce your cost-per-click, duplicate the ad and target age groups by 3 years (i.e. age 30-32).
    c. Likes and Interests: Type in and select as many interests directly related to the challenges, results, and conditions you address as you can.
    d. Education & Work: Leave as "All" unless this is specific to your target market.
    e. Connections: Select "Anyone" to start with.
6) Price Your Ad
    a. Select Pay for Click (CPC)
    b. Use Suggested Bid
    c. Try to get your suggested bid under $.50. If it's higher than that, use the duplicate ad by 3 years of age strategy mentioned above.
7) Click "Save"
    a. Your ad will be reviewed, approved, and start running.
    b. Track your ad performance and reports.
    c. Test one change in your ad body text and image at a time to compare effectiveness (CTR).

Google and Bing

1) Use Google's Keyword Tool to create a list of keywords related to your target market: https://adwords.google.com/select/KeywordToolExternal (What challenges and results are your prospective clients typing into the search engines?)
2) Follow the instructions for setting up an Adwords account with Google: https://adwords.google.com
3) And Yahoo! Search/Bing: https://adcenter.microsoft.com

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

4) Select your regional targeting and create a variety of ads with concrete, specific, emotional, results-oriented language to test against each other.
5) Enter the keywords that you've researched and bid on the ones that are within your cost-per-click advertising budget.
6) Monitor your ad campaigns to use the most effective ads.

Advanced Strategy

Each of these PPC services also offers "conversion code" that you can have your web support include in the "Thank You" page for your new subscribers.

This allows you to test not only how many clicks you are receiving for specific ads and keywords, but also which of those clicks are actually turning into subscribers.

Creating Advertisements That Get A Response

The goal of your advertisements is to get a prospective client to take action, usually to visit your landing page so that they can join your list and get your free valuable content. So whether it's online, print, radio, or television, be sure you use the following elements to get a response!

Use Results-Based Language that's Concrete, Emotional, and Specific

- Concrete: Eliminate any confusion about what you're talking about

"Problem with constipation?"

- Emotional: Provides a body response

"Do you fear how painful it will be the next time you go to the bathroom?"

- Specific: Include quantifying information

"Get regular bowel movements in as fast as 1 week without pills, powders, laxatives, or enemas."

Include a Clear Call to Action and What They Get

"Visit nomoreconstipation.com for the free report"

With Longer Ads: Use the 4 Learning Styles to Expand Your Content (This will look a lot like your landing page.)

Why – Start with what they will get if they DO take action and what they will get if they DON'T take action

"Do you suffer from chronic constipation? If you use our No More Constipation system you'll be able to address the root causes of constipation and start getting regular daily bowel movements in as fast as 1 week. If you don't use this system, the pills, powders, laxatives, and enemas will continue to provide only temporary relief while the underlying causes get worse."

What – Describe the main ideas

"Constipation is the result of chronic dryness and bowel weakness that's caused by dietary and lifestyle factors. The bad news is that constipation can lead to many other health challenges over time, including headaches, fatigue, bone and joint issues, and even nervous system disorders. The good news is that even chronic constipation is a condition that can be easily reversed with some simple changes. Our free "No More Constipation" report details our simple 3 step system to get regular daily bowel movements in as fast as 1 week."

How – Tell Them the Steps You Want Them to Take

"To get your free copy just visit nomoreconstipation.com, provide your email address and press 'submit,' and then read the short free report that will be sent instantly to your inbox."

What If – Tell Them the Action to Take Right Now

"Remember, if you don't make a change constipation can lead to more serious health challenges, some of which you may already be experiencing. So if you're ready to be done with pills, powders, laxatives, and enemas, address the root causes of constipation, get regular bowel movements, and improve your health, it's time to take action. Go to your computer or smartphone now and visit nomoreconstipation.com to instantly get your free copy of the 'No More Constipation' report."

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

16. Social Media

YouTube Channel Strategy

YouTube is now one of the world's largest internet search engines, so it's a great potential source of traffic to your website. However, it is not regionally targeted, so don't focus on this strategy unless your practice is virtual and you have products and services to market outside of your local community.

The Goals of the YouTube Channel Strategy:

- Provide valuable content to your prospective clients
- Get them to visit your landing page and opt-in to your list
- Get them to "Like" your video
- Get them to "Comment" on your video
- Get them to "Share" your video
- Get them to "Subscribe" to your Youtube channel and watch more of your videos

How to Create an Effective YouTube Channel:

- Use the 4 Learning Styles to organize the content for your videos (Why? What? How? What If?) and the description summary of your video.
- Include the url and compelling opt-in offer for your landing page across the bottom all of your videos, as the call to action at the end of your videos, and in the description for your videos.
- Also ask people to "Like" your video, leave a comment, share your video on Facebook, and subscribe to your channel so they can watch more of your valuable free videos.
- Use YouTube's "Promoted Videos" Pay-Per-Click service so that your videos are displayed at the top of the results when your prospective clients search for related topics.

Optimizing Social Media for Leads

Social Media is one of the most powerful online strategies for generating leads, building community, and "social proof" for the value of your services. The Big 3 to focus on are LinkedIn, Facebook, and Twitter. The goals for all of them are to build your credibility, build your network, and send traffic to your landing page.

LinkedIn Setup and Optimization

1. If you don't know if you already have an account, search LinkedIn for your name, and use your existing account if you have one.
2. Edit your Settings
    a. Privacy Controls: remove them, you want to be visible
    b. Email Preferences: allow direct messages from anyone, and opt-out of email from all groups and LinkedIn communications
    c. Groups, Companies, and Apps: No action needed
    d. Account: Make sure your information is current
3. Edit your Basic Information
    a. Image: Use your professional headshot picture

    b. Name: Enter your first name, then enter your last name + a results-oriented title (i.e. Doe, Overwhelm Eliminator)
    c. Professional "Headline": Use your "What You Do" statement.
    d. Location and Industry: Choose the closest metropolitan area and your most relevant industry.
4. Add an application
    a. Add the Google Docs application
    b. Create a 1-page slide show presentation with your opt-in offer and a link to your landing page
5. Edit your summary
    a. Talk about your concrete and specific achievements and results, who you serve and how
    b. Specialties: List as many as possible
6. Edit your personal information
    a. Your address is all you need in this section
7. Edit your contact settings
    a. Tell prospective clients and partners why and how to contact you
    b. Interested in: check the categories that are relevant for you
8. Edit your additional information
    a. Websites: Include your landing page, your personal Facebook page, and your business Facebook page
    b. Include your Twitter account
    c. Interests: List as many as possible
    d. Groups and Associations: Join as many relevant groups as possible, but opt-out of receiving email from any of them
    e. Honors and Awards: List any special honors or awards you've received at any stage in your career
9. Edit your experience
    a. Add ALL of your past employment positions and a description of your position and achievements in each
    b. Create a position and description for each of your programs (i.e. One-on-One, groups, etc.)
10. Edit your education
    a. Add ALL of your education and add your activities and societies for each 11. Ask for recommendations
    a. Find your current and past colleagues and clients on LinkedIn
    b. Invite them to join your LinkedIn network
    c. Ask them for a recommendation, and offer to help them write it and return the favor if it's of interest to them

Facebook Setup and Optimization

On Facebook you have one account and as many pages as you want. Start with one page for your business. Create your Facebook account first, if you don't have one already.

Business Page

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

1. Go to www.facebook.com/page
2. Choose "Company, Organization, or Institution"
3. Choose your category, enter your company name, and click "Get Started"
4. Upload your picture (use your professional headshot photo or your business logo)
5. Edit your information
    a. About: Use your "What You Do" statement and landing page link
    b. Mission: Your "What You Do" statement plus your services (how you do it)
    c. Products: Give details on the structure and benefits of your one-on-one coaching, group programs, and any products you offer
    d. Website: Use you landing page link
    e. Likes and Interests: These will populate when you "Like" a page as your business page (vs. your personal account)
6. Delete all of the other tabs
7. Create a "Welcome" tab and outsource a project to embed your landing page opt-in offer and form into the "Welcome" page and make that page your default landing page for new visitors

Personal Account
Edit your profile:

1. Basic Information: Complete it and include your "What You Do" statement in the "About Me" section
2. Profile Picture: Use your professional headshot picture
3. Featured People: Use as you like
4. Education and Work: Enter you past companies and education, and follow these instructions to link your work to your Facebook business page: http://amyporterfield.com/2011/02/how-to-add-your-facebook-page-to-the-top-of-your-profile/
5. All other categories: Add as much information as possible

Twitter Setup and Optimization

1. Create a Twitter account at www.twitter.com
2. Edit your profile
    a. Account: Don't protect your tweets
    b. Notifications: Remove all notifications
    c. Profile: Use your professional headshot picture, "What You Do" statement, and landing page
3. To start, just sync your Twitter account with your LinkedIn account and business Facebook page so that they posts you make there will also go out to anyone who follows you on Twitter

Use Social Media:

1. To find and stay connected with partners and clients (Create a "Partners" list and a "Clients" list to stay organized on Facebook)
2. To provide valuable content and updates to prospective clients and partners
3. As a "chat room" and place to post questions during teleconferences (Facebook)

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

17. Public Relations

"Get Free Coverage" Guide

Free media coverage is a great source of leads that also builds community credibility and content for you to share with prospective clients.
Follow these 7 steps to get written about in your local newspaper, and get invited to be a guest on your local radio and television programs:

1) Create your story from your clear "What You Do" statement and concrete, specific, emotional, results-oriented stories and testimonials from clients who you've helped. Share your vision of the impact that your work could help contribute to in your community (see the "Mission and Vision Statements" document from Week 12 – Group Programs and Partnerships).

2) Make a list of the local newspaper columns, radio shows, and television programs that could be interested in your story, along with the journalists and hosts connected with them.

3) Connect your story to other stories or topics they frequently or have recently covered, or other stories and topics that are currently being covered in the news that relate to your work.

4) Visit the website for the media organization you are targeting and follow their submission instructions. Include your target journalist or host in your submission.

5) Follow up with a phone call, and look for ways to connect with and meet your target journalist or host (LinkedIn, Facebook, community networking events).

6) When you meet your target journalist or host, share your interest in their columns or programs and ask what sort of stories they are most interested in. Connect your story to their interests and let them know you're open to interviews.

7) When you get the interview be sure to let readers and listeners know how they can get more information about overcoming their challenges and achieving their desired results. (Visit your landing page! …And repeat the website address.)

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Step 5: Advanced Profit Growth

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

18. It's About Community

- Group programs and partnerships engage your clients and community with each other to support the collective evolution of health and consciousness.
- If you don't build group programs and partnerships, you're not including the collective, so your impact is limited to a One-on-One model.

And It's About Leverage

1 Hour of Time	One-on-One	Groups
Clients	1 Client	No Limit
Income	$200	($ Rate) x (# of Clients)*
Impact	Direct Only	Direct + Collective

Example: A group program with 10 people x $50 each = $500/hour*

Collective Interior and Exterior

- Collective Interior is Culture (We): Group programs and partnerships evolve the collective consciousness and create a field that's more powerful than any one individual.
- Collective Exterior is Systems (Its): Group programs and partnerships ARE systems with structures that both reflect and reinforce the collective consciousness.

Group Program Structures

- Term: You work with a group of clients for a period of time and take them through a step-by-step system of education and implementation. You can build in a buddy or MasterMind system so that clients support each other.
- Continuity: These are ongoing support programs that build lasting community. Term clients continue into the continuity programs, and/or continuity clients may become term clients.

Your Mission and Vision

- Your Mission: This is your "what you do" statement + the way that you do what you do (i.e. your services).

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

- Your Vision: When you look at your community, what's the larger positive collective change that your business can help lead? What would look different so that it was easier for your clients to get more of their desired results and fewer of the challenges?

Building Partnerships

- With a clear and inspiring mission and vision in place, it's time to find partners!

1. Potential Partners
2. Win-Win-Win Relationships
3. Managing & Tracking Partnerships

Potential Partners

- Businesses: Which businesses also serve a concentration of your people in your niche and provide complementary services?
- Non-Profits: Which non-profits are focused on health or have missions and visions aligned with yours?
- Government Agencies: Which government agencies receive public money to help achieve objectives that are aligned with your mission and vision?

Win-Win-Win Relationships

1) Research the organization you want to approach to learn about their history, leadership, goals, and values.
2) Call, email, and visit them to set up a meeting with the appropriate person. Focus on their needs.
3) Meet with them and build a plan that serves them, serves your mutual clients, and benefits your business.

Managing & Tracking Partnerships

- Nourish the relationship: Dedicate a significant portion of the hours for working ON your business to your partnerships.
- If commissions (for profit) or donations (non-profit) are involved, use affiliate software and good manual tracking methods to make sure your partners are credited and paid. (see Business Resources)

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

19. Your Mission and Vision

Mission and Vision Statements

Your mission and vision statements guide and reflect the impact of your business on your clients and community. They are the platform for your community leadership and enrichment where you can stand, meet, and invite others.

Use these templates to craft your mission and vision statements.

Mission Statement

Use your "What You Do" statement + how you do it (your services).

"<Business Name> exists to help <prospective clients> get/achieve <desired results> and/or overcome <challenges> through <services>."

Example:

"Everyday Ayurveda exists to help Ayurvedic practitioners build successful and transformative businesses for themselves, their clients, and their communities through one-on-one coaching, group programs, and an engaged and empowered practitioner MasterMind community."

Vision Statement

What is the community/world that you help create when you fulfill your mission? Set a big and inspiring goal for something that your business can help achieve.

"We envision a community where <prospective clients> have <resources/results> so that <bigger impact and goals>."

Example:

"We envision a world of empowered Ayurvedic practitioners with sustainable businesses evolving health and consciousness in their communities, and aligning wealth and power with love and enlightenment."

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

20. Group Programs

Group Program Formats

Group programs allow you to leverage your time, income, and impact, and they build a culture of collective support for your clients. Group programs can be for a term, working through specific steps of education and implementation, or they can be continuity programs for ongoing community support and accountability.

Create, Launch, and Run a Term Group Program

1. Create a time frame (3 months, 6 months, 1 year).
2. Create a system and outline of education and implementation to work through.
3. Set a launch date.
4. Start enrolling clients in groups or one-on-one through the Sales Sadhana process.
5. Offer full pay and payment plan options.
6. Have a weekly session (or sessions) with content, group coaching, and action steps.
7. Set people up with accountability buddies or groups to support each other.
8. If you record the program you can create an audio or video product.

Start and Maintain a Continuity Program

1. This can be a doorway into your Term group program or and/or an ongoing support community to continue into once the Term program is complete.
2. Meet on a weekly basis. If the group is in person, a circle is an ideal setup, and each person can share: their actions, their results, their challenges, requests for coaching/support/accountability, and their action commitment for the week.
3. Set people up with accountability buddies or groups to support each other.
4. Enroll clients into this program on an ongoing basis and include it for all of your one-on-one clients.
5. Charge an ongoing monthly membership investment.

Finding Prospective Partners and Building Relationships

Who in your community also serves your prospective clients and provides complementary services? Who is aligned with your mission and vision? These are your prospective partners, and they can be businesses, non-profits, or government agencies.

Steps to Creating Win-Win-Win Relationships

1. Research your prospective partner's organization and target contacts on their website, LinkedIn, Facebook, and news stories.
2. Get to know their values, goals, and potential needs.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

3. Email, call, and visit to make a connection and set up meeting with your target contact to discuss how you may be able to help meet their needs (more customers, more revenue, more donors or volunteers, more effective use of funding).
4. When you have the meeting, enter from a place of service and focus first on your prospective partner's needs, second on the benefit to the community and your mutual clients, and third on the benefit to your business.
5. Build a partnership plan and agreement, along with tracking and management system.
6. Nourish the partnership by keeping in touch, asking what you can do to help them, making introductions, and bringing people together.

Take Action

Complete the following exercise: "Finding Business Partners" and start reaching out to build win-win-win relationships.

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.

Exercise: Finding Business Partners

Use this table to brainstorm and research prospective partners in your community, and then follow the steps to approach them and build win-win-win relationships.

Organization	Target Contact	Website	Potential Needs

Grow Your Ayurvedic Business by Jacob Griscom – Copyright © Everyday Ayurveda, LLC - All Rights Reserved.